THE ALDINE EDITION OF THE BRITISH POETS

THE POETICAL WORKS OF PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY
VOL. I
THE POETICAL WORKS OF PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY

EDITED WITH A MEMOIR BY H. BUXTON FORMAN

IN FIVE VOLUMES

VOL. I

LONDON

GEORGE BELL & SONS, YORK ST., COVENT GARDEN

AND NEW YORK

1892
CHISWICK PRESS:—CHARLES WHITTINGHAM AND CO., TOOKS COURT, CHANCERY LANE.
PREFACE.

The plan on which the present edition of Shelley's poetry is arranged does not differ essentially from that adopted in my Library edition published by Messrs. Reeves and Turner, and in the unannotated text in two volumes issued by the same publishers. The volumes published or printed in Shelley's lifetime are reproduced in chronological order, in the main. In view of the persistent vogue and historic importance of Queen Mab, it has been restored to its place at the beginning of the series; but the earlier volume of verse, Posthumous Fragments of Margaret Nicholson, not being in any sense deserving of consideration, is given in the appendix.

The series of Shelley's own publications is followed by that of the chief posthumous poems of his maturity, and these again by his posthumous minor poems, each series arranged chronologically. The translations follow; and then the appendix of juvenilia. The fragments are not separated from the complete poems, but take their places amongst them in order of date.

The text being no longer the subject of such controversy as raged for years over it, I have given it in the form in which I think it may be regarded as established, and have not thought it necessary to encumber with controversial notes what aims at being a popular edition, or to distract the reader's attention by the insertion of such an array of \textit{variorum} readings as can be given when the object is to furnish students with a complete critical apparatus. As far as possible, one system of spelling and punctuation has been adopted throughout; and an endeavour has been made to render the edition as characteristic in these respects as might be, compatibly with the convenience of contemporary readers. Those who wish to do more than apprehend and enjoy the net result of all the poetical work left by Shelley, and who desire to form their own opinions on the processes of his mind as shown in successive cancellings and substitutions, or to have before them the history of the corruptions and restorations of his text and the reasons for and against such and such readings, are referred to my Library edition. In the present edition there is but little of such matter; and the notes aim at being illustrative rather than controversial, and that within very modest limits.

In the Memoir I have sought to give in a brief space an accurate account of the events of Shelley's life, and particularly of his employments in literature, and to convey to the reader a faithful impression of his character and the characters of those with whom he was most closely connected. Here again, it seems superfluous to make any display of authorities. The biographical notes left by Mrs. Shelley, the Lives by Medwin and Hogg, \textit{The Shelley Memorials}, Trelawny's \textit{Recollections}, the memoirs published by Mr. W. M. Rossetti, the authoritative biography which Professor Edward Dowden wrote at the request of Sir Percy and Lady Shelley, and my own extensive collection of original papers relating to Shelley, have been drawn on indifferently.

As regards the sources of the body of poetry contained in this first volume, a few words will suffice. The authority for Queen Mab and its voluminous notes, written or compiled by Shelley, is his own privately printed edition of 1813. Alastor and the minor poems, ending with the First Part of The Daemon of the World, are the component parts of a little volume which he had printed at Weybridge with the title Alastor; or, the Spirit of Solitude: and Other Poems, and the date 1816. By the time that volume was prepared he had grown very critical towards Queen Mab, of which he revised elaborately the first, second, eighth and ninth sections, making out of them a fresh poem in two parts, which he called The Daemon of the World. The first part was published with Alastor as “a fragment.” The second part remained in manuscript till 1876, when I printed it from his own copy of Queen Mab (in my collection), on which the manuscript revision was made. The authority for Mont Blanc: Lines written in the Vale of Chamouni, is a small volume mainly of prose by Mrs. Shelley, but partly Shelley’s, and with this fine poem at the close: the book is called History of a Six Weeks’ Tour through a Part of France, Switzerland, Germany and Holland: with Letters descriptive of a Sail round the Lake of Geneva, and of the Glaciers of Chamouni (1817).

H. B. F.
<table> <thead>
<tr>
<th>CONTENTS.</th>
<th></th>
</tr> </thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Vol. I.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MEMOIR</td>
<td>xi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>QUEEN MAB; A PHILOSOPHICAL POEM:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>To Harriet * * * *</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto I.</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto II.</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto III.</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto IV.</td>
<td>28</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto V.</td>
<td>37</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto VI.</td>
<td>45</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto VII.</td>
<td>52</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto VIII.</td>
<td>61</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Canto IX.</td>
<td>68</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Notes</td>
<td>77</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ALASTOR; OR, THE SPIRIT OF SOLITUDE:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>And Other Poems:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Preface</td>
<td>139</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alastor, or, the Spirit of Solitude</td>
<td>143</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ΔΑΚΡΥΣΙ ΔΙΟΙΣΩ ΠΟΤΜΟΝ ΑΠΟΤΜΟΝ [To Coleridge]</td>
<td>168</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stanzas.—April, 1814</td>
<td>169</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mutability</td>
<td>170</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest</td>
<td>171</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A Summer-Evening Church-Yard, Lechlade, Gloucestershire</td>
<td>172</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>To Wordsworth [Sonnet]</td>
<td>174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feelings of a Republican on the Fall of Bonaparte [Sonnet]</td>
<td>174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CONTENTS.</td>
<td>PAGE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alastor; or, the Spirit of Solitude:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>and other Poems—continued:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sonnet from the Italian of Dante. Dante Alighieri to Guido Cavalcanti</td>
<td>175</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Translated from the Greek of Moschus</td>
<td>176</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[Sonnet]</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Daemon of the World: Part I.</td>
<td>177</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Daemon of the World: Part II.</td>
<td>187</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mont Blanc: Lines written in the Vale of Chamouni</td>
<td>197</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cancelled Passage</td>
<td>203</td>
</tr> </tbody>
</table>
MEMOIR.

The relevancy of Shelley's pedigree to his place in the world's story has been questioned. Considering how little we know of the laws of heredity as affecting those highest of all phenomena the manifestations of the mind of man, it may be wise to refrain for the present from serious discussion of the question. Fifty years hence it may be discussed more fruitfully than now. Meanwhile, the thoughtful student of literature and history will not cease to ponder on the strange revenge of time which Shelley's life and works constitute. He whose mission it was to loosen traditional authority and untie worn-out convention was born in the very lap of that solid but exclusive comfort which the centuries had been building upon authority and convention. He who was more penetrable by ideas than any poet of his age came into the world among associations where every new idea was, "God bless us! a thing of naught." He who was still aspiring to universal brotherhood and still ardently believing that man might be free and equal, when he prematurely left the world, had come into it in a corner where to grow up with all the ease and comfort of the unworking few, amid the teeming misery of the working many, was as natural for him as to breathe the air or draw in his mother's milk. In a word, he who more than any poet of his day embodied the finer aspirations of the French Revolution came of "an ancient and honourable" family residing in the county of Sussex and occupied from generation to generation, like other ancient and honourable families, in consolidating their own well-being, and, whether consciously or unconsciously, building up that tyranny of the strong over the weak, which the French Revolution attempted to break.

The birth of such a spirit into any particular family is mysterious enough; and yet it is natural to think that, if the intellectual child of the revolution had taken upon him our flesh in some other family, the smell of blood might have been less abhorrent to him,—the ideas of the revolution embodied in his works with a less absolute detestation for its horrors. The intense rarefaction of the atmosphere surrounding the treatment of those ideas, the instinctive freedom of his work from all that is harsh, coarse, or commonplace, are things to be grateful for; and those of us who still think that there is virtue in "gentle blood" may be pleased to thank Shelley's gentle blood for that freedom.

The unconsidered corner of England in which he entered the world was the fine old residence known as Field Place, situate near the town of Horsham in Sussex. There it was that Mr. Timothy Shelley resided with his wife Elizabeth, born Pilfold—be a country gentleman of a not unkindly disposition, but irritable, consequential and inaccessible to ideas even to the point of dulness—she the beautiful and intelligent daughter of Charles Pilfold of Effingham in Surrey. The eldest child of this worthy but not remarkable couple was born on the 4th of August 1792; and they called him by the name of Percy Bysshe,—Percy, it is said, on account of a distant connexion with the Northumberland family, and Bysshe for a reason less remote. That name, which had come into the family when John Shelley in 1692 married Hellen, daughter and co-heiress of Roger Bysshe of Fen Place, was borne a hundred years later by Mr. Timothy Shelley's father, Mr. Bysshe Shelley, grandson to the said John and Hellen. That gentleman, who was living in a cottage at Horsham in 1792, was possessed of this world's goods in abundance, though his mode of life did not at that time indicate riches. He had married two women of fortune, whose wealth had not saved him from gout, eccentricity, and violence of temper.

The persistence of fore-names in the family was strong. Shelley's grandfather was not the first Bysshe Shelley in the family; Shelley's father was not the first Timothy; Shelley was not the first Percy, for his grandfather had an uncle Percy; and as for the name Hellen, which brought its two Rs into the family along with the dowry of Roger Bysshe's daughter, it carried that peculiarity into our own days; for it was borne by Shelley's youngest sister but one, the "dear little Hellen" whom we meet in Hogg's Life.

Beauty of person was part of Shelley's birthright. It was striking both in his grandfather and in his mother. He himself was slight in figure with fair fresh complexion, vivacious blue eyes, and golden curling hair which assumed a rich brown tone as he matured. His disposition was gentle and loving, excitable and imaginative; and from an early time he tended towards dreamy and unchildlike habits rather than towards the romping gamesomeness typical of normal childhood; and this tendency was fostered by the circumstance that for many years no other boy was born at Field Place. For the practical purposes of moral and mental education he may be said to have been brotherless; and this goes for much in the forming of his character. Surrounded by an increasing company of younger sisters, he grew up in conditions which fostered all that was tender and gentle in his nature.

At the age of six years the little boy was sent to a day-school at the neighbouring village of Warnham, where he began, under the Rev. Mr. Edwards, the study of Latin. From this time to that of his departure to boarding-school must have been happy days for the little sisters, to whom he used to tell tales of wonder and amazement, and with whom he explored the darkest and least frequented regions of Field Place, beginning very early those recondite experiments and incantations which eventually became serious researches after ghosts and fiends.

When he was ten years old the daily round of home occupations was broken up by the departure of the still small boy for Isleworth, where, at Sion House Academy, presided over by Dr. Greenlaw, he and some fifty or sixty other boys underwent a somewhat more liberal tutelage than was to be found at the village of Warnham. At Sion House Shelley's cousin, Thomas Medwin, was also being educated; and here at the same period was a lad whose destiny it was to be known to future times as Sir John Rennie, engineer and deviser of London Bridge and other great works. At Sion House the brotherless boy formed a romantic attachment for a lad of his own age, who may or may not have been as "gentle and brave and generous" as the poet in Alastor, and as Shelley unquestionably believed him to be. Of Shelley himself Rennie records that he was "very amiable, noble, high-spirited, and generous," when kindly treated; but his shyness and dissimilarity to other lads led to a good deal of that brutal persecution with which boys usually harden themselves and each other for the struggle to come. Probably the sensitive lad's misery under this persecution was intense. The records of boyish unhappiness contained in his poetry are not in the nature of things likely to be exaggerated. Still his attachment to the one boy who stood to him in loco fratri went for much, for one love outweighs a multitude of little transient hates; and meanwhile he was making fair progress in his classical studies and was experiencing a high intellectual pleasure from the scientific lectures which he attended.

The holidays were joyful times alike for the little sisters at Field Place and for the boy Percy. Renewal of incantations with fresh scientific knowledge, and of romantic tale-telling with fresh stores of learning, were matters of course. Before he had completed his twelfth year, the scene of his education and persecution was widened. In 1804 he was transferred from Dr. Greenlaw's care to Eton College, of which Dr. Goodall was at that time head-master. The tutor with whom the young oppidan was placed had the reputation of being the dullest man at Eton, though good-natured and well-meaning. It was not to be expected that this gentleman, George Bethell to wit, would be of much effect in keeping Shelley from the same sort of collision with his fellows at Eton as he had come into with Dr. Greenlaw's presumably smaller cubs. At Eton, as at Sion House, persecution of the still shy and sensitive lad was a favourite amusement. The coarser fibre of the youths, of whom many were being bred to help rule the world and then be quickly forgotten, naturally enough revolted against the strange beauty and refinement of the intellectual creature whom fate had set in their midst; and it was as natural for them to bully him as for a litter of bull-pups to snap and paw at a butterfly, or later on to worry a kitten. A boy who did not care much for cricket and foot-ball, whose appetite for learning of an out-of-the-way kind was preternatural, whose facility of acquisition and expression was abnormal, and who persistently rebelled against the fagging system as an intolerable tyranny and oppression, could not possibly be let alone. Still, Shelley was a force at Eton with which the coarsest and strongest could not tamper in complete safety. Persecution liberated electric spasms of passion not to be regarded with contempt. This shy and habitually gentle boy had his own unconventional means of self-defence; and the absence of any plausible knowledge whether the next missile hurled at his persecutor might be an inkstand, a hedgehog, or a little boy, was obviously a consideration which the hardiest young ruffian might well hesitate to ignore.

Before he left Eton, Shelley had endeared himself to some and made himself respected by others. Some who knew him there have borne testimony to his generosity, tenderness, and moral courage; and it is on record that he "feared nothing but what was false or low." Of fear properly so called little if any is to be traced in his record of less than thirty years; and it may be believed implicitly that what he suffered at Sion House and Eton College partook in no degree of the sordid character of fear. Even then he was beginning to be

As a nerve o'er which do creep
The else unfelt oppressions of this earth, and no stretch of imagination is needed to assure us that the misery of those boyish days arose from the sense that he was an alien in the land of school, that individual freedom was unattainable, that he was in the grip of a ruthless force which he could not withstand and would not give in to, and that his resentment of these ills was ineffectual to emancipate him from them. Already he was qualifying for his life-long protest against oppression,—the dedication of his powers to the service of freedom and humanity.

One of the friends of this period to whom he owed most was Dr. James Lind of Windsor—with whom he passed a great deal of time while resident at Eton, and whose character is portrayed in the old hermit of Laon and Cythna, and again in the Zonoras of Prince Athanase. It is needless to say that the portrait was in each case highly idealized; for every character depicted by Shelley is highly idealized; indeed the faculty of idealizing experience was not limited in its operation to the characters and scenes which enter into the fabric of his literary work. This idealization was constitutional—he saw his grandfather, his parents, his sisters, not as others saw them; and he endowed those whom he met and loved with qualities of his own finer nature in liberal measure. In fact, this process must be kept constantly in mind if we would apprehend the meaning of many things that seem strange in his life and his views of the men and women whom he met.

But with all his ideality, the youthful Shelley is not to be counted as a mere visionary. The strong practical bent of his character came out early. The wonders of science were not enough of themselves to exhaust the mental energy he had to devote to them; and he sought realization in chemical and other experiments and in microscopic investigations. As regards literary realization, not much of his earlier handiwork has survived. We have the verses to a cat written when he was some seven years old; and he is said to have done far more than his share of Latin verse-writing. His grandfather, who must now be called Sir Byssie, for he was created a Baronet in 1806, is credited with having indulged the youth's literary productivity by paying for private impressions of some of his early pieces. It may be supposed that this was after the creation of the Baronetcy, which, be it remarked, took place in the very year that produced another novelty for Shelley. In 1806, after fourteen years of bringing daughters into the world, Mrs. Timothy Shelley gave birth to a second son, John, afterwards father of the present Baronet. The mention of this last child of Shelley's parents brings to mind an unpublished piece of his early work which Sir Bysshe probably never saw,—which it is to be hoped the author’s parents never saw,—and which it were preferable the sun had never seen. It is a poetical epistle to Edward Graham, the son of Mr. Timothy Shelley’s fac-totum, characterized by a certain adolescent wantonness unlike anything else of Shelley’s, but distinctly clever. Its ribald allusions to Mr. Timothy Shelley represent a passing phase of the youth’s character—a phase of which it would have been hard to suspect the existence save for this one document, deriving importance simply from this uniqueness and from its mention of Shelley’s brother in connexion with an incident of practical experiment. The passage alluded to is this:—

I have been
With little Jack upon the green—
A dear delightful red-faced brute,
And setting up a parachute;

from which it is clear that the healthy, jolly, rubicund infant brother was a source of real pleasure to the school-boy when he went home for the holidays.

Whatever the nature of the mysterious parachute experiment may have been, it is evident that the pursuit of letters was being carried on then, as later, side by side with pursuits of practical realization which called the dreamer out of his dreams to shape something. In those days he was full of life and vigour, a great walker, and expert in the use of the fowling-piece,—his snipe-shooting having been the envy of his cousin Medwin. At once imaginative and practical, it is scarcely surprising that, before his Eton days were ended, he had not only written a romance, but succeeded in getting it printed and published.

As literature, Zastrozzi is not only without merit, but is a desperately bad performance which no one should read save for psychical study. Most of it was written in the year 1809, in which Shelley attained the age of seventeen—an age when the literary efforts of boys are not usually sustained for any considerable length of time, whether at a high or at a low level. The remarkable thing about this first published book of Shelley's is that, at a time when he had ample occupation of other kinds, he not only finished writing what, bad as it is, sufficed to make a duodecimo volume of over 250 pages, but pursued his undertaking to the point of inducing Messrs. Wilkie and Robinson of Paternoster Row to publish it. It appears to have issued from the press in the spring of 1810; and there are still extant letters from the juvenile author treating of such practical questions as the bribing of reviewers, the distribution of copies of the book, and dealings with the publishers in regard to other literary ventures.

It has been alleged that this portentous first publication was not the unaided production of Shelley, but that he was assisted in the work by his cousin Harriet Grove, to whom he had devoted his boyish affections. The statement has not much probability, notwithstanding the fact that joint authorship was a familiar process to him. No doubt he worked with Thomas Medwin on the production of a lost work described by Medwin as a "Nightmare," and on that absurd poem The Wandering Jew, of which a good deal of Medwin's, but only a small fragment of Shelley's part, has come down to us; and in the same year, 1810, appeared what may be called his first essay in published verse,—also said to have been a work of joint authorship. This was a volume of some sixty-four pages issued under the title of Original Poetry by Victor and Cazire, of which no copy is known to the circle of Shelley's admirers. It is generally supposed that "Cazire" was Harriet Grove. The book was published by Stockdale of Pall Mall, who has recorded that, when about a hundred copies were in circulation, he discovered in the Original Poetry some verses which had previously been published as the work of Matthew Gregory Lewis. It seems that "Cazire" had played "Victor" false. The publisher communicated to Shelley his discovery; and the book was at once suppressed.

This episode in the poet's early literary life belongs to the autumn of 1810. In the Michaelmas term of that year, having matriculated in the previous April, he commenced residence at University College, Oxford. Here he at once fell in with Thomas Jefferson Hogg, to whom, apparently by sheer force of contrast, he was drawn into close companionship. Hogg, a bon-vivant and humourist, admired the purity of his friend's conversation and the sanctity of his life, amid the temptations of Oxford, and was greatly impressed by his unbounded generosity, his courtesy, and his remarkable love of children. In his Life of Shelley he claims a sort of partnership in the next work which has come down to us—Shelley's earliest extant volume of verse, the Posthumous Fragments of Margaret Nicholson. Hogg says that a group of verses was at first indited seriously by Shelley, who showed printer's proofs of them to his friend,—that the two together afterwards turned them into burlesques, and that the printer, who had commenced the work on Shelley's account, ended by publishing it in quarto at his own risk. It is a curious story; and the joke of attributing these very poor extravagances to the mad washerwoman who was then in confinement for an attempt on the life of George III. was a poor joke at the best. A small indelicacy, inserted by another hand in one of the poems, was omitted from some of the copies; and one of these Shelley had sent to his mother before the end of November 1810.

Before the turn of the year was published a second romance, St. Irvyne; or, the Rosicrucian, bearing the date 1811. This was issued by Stockdale, who appears to have "fitted it for the press." It is if anything worse than Zastrozzi, and probably of about the same period. So curiously are two stories mingled in its pages, and so frequent in it are locutions savouring of the German tongue, that it might well be a translation from two of the vile German romances of the time, welded together with little skill, and re-named. It is adorned with several compositions in verse which are echoes of Byron's early poems and of "Monk" Lewis's tawdry abominations. By this time his views had become a source of anxiety to his parents. Miss Grove, too, cooled down under the chilling influence of her eccentrically intellectual cousin's growing heterodoxy, and in the course of the year married a Mr. Helyar.

There is no evidence as to the precise period to which a lost poem entitled An Essay on Love is to be assigned; but Shelley sent a copy to Godwin as a production of his "early youth," though later than the two romances. It may have been one of the private prints which Sir Bysshe is said to have caused to be done at Horsham. That this "little poem," as Shelley called it, is not forthcoming is strange enough; but not so the loss of his next substantive work, which was probably, by the joint efforts of Shelley and Hogg, completed in manuscript and in great part put through the press. This was a novel entitled Leonora, the printing of which was begun by Mr. Munday of Oxford, who, we are told, refused to proceed with it, in consequence of the discovery that Shelley "had interwoven his free notions throughout the work." Mr. Munday appears to have "strongly endeavoured to dissuade him from its publication altogether;" but the advice was disregarded; and Shelley afterwards took the copy to Mr. King, a printer at Abingdon, who had nearly completed the work, when an event occurred to arrest him.

During Shelley's brief sojourn at Oxford the natural bent of his intellect towards free enquiry and the hatred which his bitter school experiences had fostered in him for tyranny, moral, physical or intellectual, were not unnaturally directing his energies into a somewhat narrow channel of revolt. He had written a satirical poem which there is reason to suspect of having had a political character; he had been interested in the imprisonment of Peter Finnerty for a libel on Castlereagh,—so much interested that, beside subscribing to a fund for Finnerty's benefit, he wrote and published a poem (now introuvable) entitled A Poetical Essay on the Existing State of Things, devising the proceeds of sale to the maintenance of the man in prison. Further, he had written to Leigh Hunt, as Editor of The Examiner, proposing the establishment of a league for the mutual defence of free thought. And finally he wrote, and distributed in print a pamphlet entitled The Necessity of Atheism, designed to put the orthodox on their mettle and provoke argument—to which, at this time, he was passionately addicted. It was this last performance that brought to a close, not only the Leonora undertaking, but also Shelley's college career, and his cordial relations with his father. The Necessity of Atheism, though anonymously issued, was known to be Shelley's. Questioned by the Master of University College as to his authorship of the obnoxious print, which he had disseminated with quixotic ostentation, he refused to answer. Hogg, similarly questioned, refused in like manner; and, on the 25th of March 1811, the two young undergraduates were summarily expelled from their college, not ostensibly for disseminating heretical views, but for contumacy. Mr. King of Abingdon, on hearing the news, desisted from the completion of Leonora; and Shelley's father forbad him the paternal mansion of Field Place, save on impracticable conditions.

In company with Hogg, Shelley proceeded, after the expulsion, to London; and there the two occupied the same lodgings. Before long, Hogg went northward, to his family, who resided at Norton, near Stockton-on-Tees. Shelley remained alone, visiting his sisters, who were at school at Clapham, and seeing something of the Grove family. A member of that family recollected that his literary cousin assiduously studied medicine and wrote a poem of some fifty lines about a gorgeous fête at Carlton House which somewhat disturbed the Town by its extravagance in the summer of 1811. This poem Shelley got printed; and, although he amused himself by throwing copies into the carriages of visitors bound for Carlton House after the fête, no copy is at present known to exist.

The most momentous incident of this residence in London was his introduction to Harriett Westbrook, a school-fellow of his sisters, aged sixteen, pretty and intelligent, with a certain strain of eccentricity that had for him a factitious attraction. Harriett, whose father had kept a coffee-house in London and had now retired from business, had, either from natural bent or from external influence, come to regard herself as the victim of domestic persecution. She had a sister, Eliza, of some thirty years old, who stood to her in the place of a mother, and who showed a strangely warm interest in the expelled undergraduate with the heterodox views, baronetcy in prospect, and great property entailed upon him. Eliza brought her pretty young sister to call on Shelley, and sympathized in his pursuits during his residence in London. Nor did these attentions abate after his removal from the metropolis. While Shelley was staying at Cwm Elan with a cousin, it chanced that the Westbrooks were also in Wales. Eventually, Harriett was led to take the poet into her confidence in the matter of domestic oppression,—to throw herself on his protection,—and indeed to avow that she loved him and was ready to fly with him. Without really reciprocating her love, Shelley adopted the rash course of marrying her. It is true he told her that the marital contract was not in his eyes morally binding any longer than it conducted to the happiness of the parties. Hence, as he already numbered among his heresies an adherence to the anti-matri-monial views of Godwin and his school, his act of knight-errantry in making Harriett his wife must not be regarded as a determination to consecrate his life if need be to her rescue from persecution, but as a concession of his theoretic objections to marriage, in favour of her comfort and good name for the time being, and of the legitimacy of her offspring.

Their first marriage took place at Edinburgh on the 28th of August 1811. He was nineteen years old and she sixteen. His father, who had been allowing him £200 a year, withdrew that support; and, although later on the grants of Mr. Shelley and Mr. Westbrook yielded an income of £400 a year, the fugitive boy and girl were in sore enough straits for a time. Besides Edinburgh they visited York and the Lakes, remaining at Keswick till February 1812. Godwin's teachings, meantime, were taking serious effect on Shelley. An unpublished novel which he wrote, or partially wrote, under the title of Hubert Cauvin, is probably lost. Its object was to develope the causes of the failure of the French Revolution to benefit mankind. Of a more practical undertaking the literary evidence remains. Determined to agitate in favour of Catholic Emancipation and the repeal of the Union Act, he wrote an address to the Irish, urging those measures. In February 1812 he proceeded with Harriett to Dublin, and there published two pamphlets, An Address to the Irish People, and Proposals for an Association of those Philanthropists who convinced of the Inadequacy of the Moral and Political State of Ireland to produce Benefits which are nevertheless attainable, are willing to unite to accomplish its Regeneration. He also got printed in Dublin a broadside Declaration of Rights, starting with the then alarming assertion, "Government has no rights." His experiences in disseminating the two pamphlets, speaking in public, dining with Curran, and corresponding with Godwin, were such as to induce him soon to abandon the attempt to compass an immediate emancipation of the Roman Catholics and repeal of the Union; and we next find him crossing to Wales with his wife and her sister Eliza. From Nantgwillt, after a brief stay, they went to Lynmouth, on the north coast of Devon, and remained there from June to August.
MEMOIR.

The best part of a year's residence with Harriett had by this time fostered an affection for her which he had not felt at first. The young couple basked at once in the Devonshire sunshine, in the imaginary light of the countenance of one Elizabeth Hitchener, a Sussex schoolmistress with whom Shelley had become acquainted in 1811 while on a visit to his Uncle Pilfold at Cuckfield, and whom the two young people had agreed to regard as the embodiment of all that was noble and enlightened in woman. There was also the real light of William Godwin's keen intellect, with which Shelley was in touch through the medium of the post. Besides devising strange vehicles for the conveyance of copies of the Declaration of Rights and of a broadside ballad, The Devil's Walk, printed about this time, Shelley was occupied with another defence of free investigation and free speech. How he divided his time between floating bottles and setting up balloons freighted with sedition, and writing his next pamphlet and some still unpublished poems, is not material; but it is to be noted that here on the borders of the Bristol Channel he produced his first really good prose essay and projected what still remains his most popular poem, Queen Mab. His pamphlet entitled A Letter to Lord Ellenborough occasioned by the Sentence which he passed on Mr. D. I. Eaton, as Publisher of the Third Part of Paine's Age of Reason, was well felt, well reasoned, and well expressed; and Mr. Syle, the Barnstaple printer employed by Shelley, only took fright at its inflammatory character and destroyed it when Shelley had succeeded in getting some copies into the hands of Hookham of Bond Street.

The residence in Devon came to an end through the rash employment of a man-servant to post up copies of the Declaration at Barnstaple. The man was sent to prison for that offence; and the Shelleys quitted Lynmouth somewhat precipitately after doing what was possible for the convicted agent's relief. Proceeding to Tremadoc in Carnarvonshire, they found a work of practical philanthropy to engage the interest of Shelley, the construction of an embankment of which the object was to reclaim from the sea a considerable piece of land. To obtain money for the cost of this undertaking he went to London, and there, at length, in October 1812, became personally acquainted with Godwin. The society of Miss Hitchener having become unbearable to the young couple, Shelley with some difficulty shook her off, per contrá adding to his circle of friends the vegetarian enthusiast Frank Newton and his family. It was in this year, also, that Shelley first met Thomas Love Peacock.

Returning to Wales, the Shelleys took up their quarters at an isolated house called Tanyrallt. Here the round of Shelley's life of study and ministration to the wants of the poor was suddenly broken in upon by a mysterious night attack on the house and its inmates, the source of much controversy. This took place at about the time when Shelley had completed the nine sections of Queen Mab, February 1813.

A poem of which "The Past, the Present, and the Future" can be said even by the author to be "the grand and comprehensive topics," naturally rounds an epoch in his life. Here, at twenty years of age, the genius of practical realization which had made a full-blown author of the Eton boy, made a full-blown poet of the youthful husband—though not a great poet: Shelley the great poet was to come of other influences than those which had shaped his work up to the completion of Queen Mab. Still, in his way, he had by the beginning of 1813 achieved the ambitious feat of applying to the entire scheme of man's life and history his social and philosophical conceptions, and reducing the series of thoughts, some of them original, most of them assimilated, to an ordered and fairly well-knit whole, constructed in competent blank verse, and written in nervous, direct, sonorous English. This poem he proceeded to weight with a mass of controversial notes from the leading revolutionary authors of the epoch; and, unable to find a bold enough publisher, he caused it to be printed on his own account for private distribution. This was all done in the course of 1813. By the spring of that year, he and Harriett had been again to Ireland, this time visiting Killarney and Cork, and had returned to London for Harriett’s confinement. Their first child was born in June 1813, and was called Lanthe Eliza. Removing afterwards to Bracknell, they became intimate with Mrs. Newton’s sister, Mrs. Boinville, and her daughter Mrs. Turner—Cornelia Turner. Shelley pursued the study of the Italian classics and the practice of vegetarianism, travelled a good deal, got further and further into debt through his own impulsive liberality and his wife’s extravagance, and wrote a dialogue between “Eusebes” and “Theosophus,” entitled A Refutation of Deism, which was published anonymously in 1814. This discussion between a christian and a deist embodied the results of Shelley’s latest readings in philosophy, and marks a considerable intellectual advance upon his own portion of the Queen Mab notes. It was in fact intended to refute the christian system.

The furnished house at Windsor which the Shelley household occupied at the end of 1813 and beginning of 1814 was now becoming the scene of complete unhappiness. On the 24th of March the young people went through a Church of England marriage ceremony, apparently to remove doubts as to the legitimacy of possible male issue, and facilitate the raising of money on ruinous post-obit bonds. Certainly the cause of the new marriage was not increased affection; for Shelley and his wife were no longer in sympathy: she had ceased to lend herself with girlish facility to his wildly practical schemes for the regeneration of mankind, and even went counter to him in many ways, while her sister Eliza, still of the household, was a source of perennial irritation. Harriett’s attitude at length drove Shelley more and more to the society of Mrs. Boinville and Mrs. Turner. The estrangement gradually hardened; an attempt of Shelley’s to effect a reconciliation failed; and at length he betook himself to London, Harriett taking up her residence at Bath.

And now came into play the force which had not been reckoned for when the ill assorted marriage was brought about. Poor Harriett, whose heart had fluttered into such affection as it was capable of when the fascinating young enthusiast’s gaze had dwelt kindly upon her, was now to learn into how grave an error she had fallen when she threw herself upon his too yielding generosity. Not hers to keep pace with the growing powers of his intellect or to fill the widening void which represented in his rapid development the craving for spiritual companionship! During the transition between his abnormal boyhood and his intellectual, moral and spiritual maturity, realization constantly overtook conception; and his yearning after the good, the beautiful and the true was not directed by sufficient knowledge of the universe and experience of human passion to make his own clever performances pall upon his appetite for creation. In that period of transition, the new experience of daily life in the closest intimacy with a bright pink and white beauty whose intelligence was alive, untrammelled, and engaged also by this novel life of intimacy, meant much for a high-strung nature like Shelley’s; nor was it difficult for the doomed girl to take her blithe small part in his various undertakings if only for the spice of queerness in them. She, too, could play at vegetarianism and write of “slaughtered fowls” to be provided for a visitor not of that persuasion. She too could skip about Dublin secreting printed pamphlets in places where perchance they might be found and read. She too could join in the fun of launching bottles and boxes on the Bristol Channel to convey revolutionary doctrines none knew whither in the shape of Declarations of Rights. And she too in her girlish vigour could flit from place to delightful place—in these green islands as the exigencies of her fitful Ariel’s circumstances might dictate. “But childhood is a fleeting span;” and at length came the ever-present discomforts of pregnancy, and the pains of motherhood; and she who was not sufficiently endowed with the devotedness characteristic of true womanhood to nurse her first-born child even at her husband’s urgent wish, slid by sure degrees away from her place in his life. It was not for her to cast off the tyranny of that Eliza who was her fate, much less the tyranny of custom when the novelty of eccentricity had worn off. Now, if Ariel was to hold her, it must be, not by the fascination of a presence becoming inscrutable or by the powers of an intellect soaring ever further beyond her narrow ken, but by wasting the substance of his heirs on carriage-keeping and wet-nurses, superfluous decoration of her person, her house and her table, and other common-place extravagances. For these toys she did not offer a great sympathetic affection; for, poor child, she had it not to offer. Blinded to the true situation and issue, she did not even offer the best she had; but, reckless or forgetful,—who shall say?—ignored the warning which Shelley gave her in accepting her proffered person, that to him the marriage state which he conferred on her as a free gift stood not in the light of a contract binding the parties to a life of misery.

Had he devoted himself to a life of misery rather than leave his wife he would not have done more than many men and women have done for the sake of their children if for no other sake. But the coil was complicated by a conviction which he entertained that she was unfaithful to him; and in that conviction he let the breach widen. Harriett denied the charge; and no one has a right to assert it as more than a conviction of Shelley’s.

Probably poor Harriett thought she might as well spend her husband’s money on what he considered frivolities as let him bestow it on William Godwin, as he was doing at this time. However that may be, the relations between Shelley and the Godwin household were destined to be disastrous enough for her; for here it was that the force unreckoned for was to be liberated. In the summer of 1814 the young daughter of Godwin and Mary Wollstonecraft, returning home from a stay in Scotland, engaged Shelley’s attention. Though not yet seventeen years old, Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin had a strong character and intellect and a receptive, serious nature. She had inherited much womanly charm from her mother; and her sensitive pale face and eager hazel eyes, surmounted by an ample brow and golden hair, combined with a thrilling voice and earnest demeanour to make her peculiarly attractive to Shelley. Her very parentage stimulated his imagination; and, in a word, he fell hopelessly in love with her. Mary, who was unhappy with her stepmother, found great relief and comfort in the society of the young disciple of her father,—poet, philosopher and practical philanthropist; she resisted for some time the natural course of a sympathy so vivid and uncommon in its elements; but finally, acting upon the "anti-matrimonial" tradition of her parents, and convinced of the forfeiture of Harriett's claims, she consented to unite her fate with Shelley's.

Harriett was summoned to London and told by Shelley of this new turn in the wheel of her fortune. Whatever the domestic events which had tended to this situation, it is certain that Shelley's avowal of his determination to leave his wife altogether was a great shock to her, and resulted in a serious illness. But he was not to be moved from his fixed purpose, while duly providing for Harriett, to cast in his lot with Mary. On the 28th of July 1814, accompanied by Claire Clairmont, the daughter of Mrs. Godwin by a former marriage, Shelley and Mary fled from London to Dover, crossed the channel in an open boat, and proceeded to Paris, and thence to Switzerland. At Brunnen on the Lake of Lucerne Shelley began to write a tale entitled The Assassins, the extant fragment of which, though almost as wild as Zastrozzi, has the true ring of the mintage of creative genius. He had expanded into a new creature. The full exercise of the emotional nature had already endowed him with the faculty of vivifying even what was in conception grotesque; and the persons of this romantic fragment live and move. It was not for nothing that Shelley, his whole being aroused into new emotional life, had passed through Europe just after the battle of Waterloo and seen with his own eyes the devastations caused by a great war. It was not for nothing that he came face to face with mountain and lake and rapid and mighty river. His new experiences of man and nature were made at a fortunate moment, impressing him with large conceptions and confirming the bent of his faculties towards the liberation of his kind.

The river navigation whereby the poet and his two companions returned from Brunnen homewards gave him a great opportunity of seeing fine scenery. Passing by the Reuss to Lauffen-burg, and thence to Mumpf in a leaky canoe, they proceeded to Basle and descended the Rhine to Mayence and Cologne,—thence by way of Cleves, Rotterdam, and Marsluys to Gravesend, where they arrived on the 13th of September 1814.

During the rest of the year lack of funds was keenly felt. In October Shelley attempted to continue The Assassins, but gave up the enterprise, constrained by untoward circumstances. In November Harriett bore him a son, Charles Bysshe; and there were times when, with the material and moral anxieties of two households on his hands, he was so hardly pressed by creditors that he had to keep in hiding and be separated from Mary. Unfavourable as the conditions were for literary production, he did complete one task before the end of 1814, namely, a criticism of a book by Hogg called Memoirs of Prince Alexy Haimatoff: This

At the turn of the year there "shone deliverance" so far as ways and means were concerned. Sir Bysshe died full of years and gout, and leaving a large amount of money. The poet became the immediate heir to the baronetcy and the entailed estates; and he was enabled to effect an arrangement with his father whereby he eventually came into possession of £1,000 a year, of which he allowed Harriet £200. In order to make himself more useful to the poor, he now studied medicine and surgery at a hospital in London, at a time, too, when his own health had become indifferent. Again in the summer of 1815 he visited Devonshire; and at last he and Mary settled at Bishopsgate, near Windsor Park, whence they set off with Thomas Love Peacock and Charles Clairmont to explore the Thames, ascending it as far as Lechlade. On their return, mainly in the seclusion of Windsor Great Park, he composed his first truly great poem, Alastor. Coloured by the sombre experiences through which he had passed and especially by the state of physical suffering into which he had fallen,—a state not free from the sense of approaching death,—the poem depicted a morbid character, and one whom he recognized and lamented as morbid; but the large vision of man and nature, the intense feeling for phases of the inner life, the exquisite gift of landscape painting in words, and the perfect music and mastery of blank verse are all furthest removed from morbid, and render the gift of Alastor precious for all time.

Let the censorious say what they will of Shelley's relations with the two women to whom, successively, he gave his name, one thing is certain,—that the world is the richer for his contact with Mary Godwin. Harriett Westbrook had not the energy, the intellect, or the tact to awaken his highest nature. It was not her good hap to inspire in him a grand passion. It was Mary Godwin's—"a sudden, violent, irresistible, uncontrollable passion"; and she had the energy, the intellect and the tact to call the inmost spirit of poesy into play where it slumbered amid the complex forces that went to make up that wondrous being. At an age when Harriett was aspiring to soar out of her companionship in Shelley's unworldly ways into a region of coaches and liveries, costly dresses and plate, gaiety and tinsel and frivolity, Mary was writing Frankenstein,—a work which obviously owes something to that same contact of spirits, but which is assuredly as much her work as Shelley's poems are his,—a work which inspired Shelley with a respect for her gifts only surpassed by his affection for her person. Of that respect ample evidence exists in the Preface which he wrote and in the short review of the work, published after his death.

The anti-matrimonial philosopher Godwin, though still drawing upon Shelley's resources for his needs, was in great dudgeon with the young couple who had acted upon his theories; and their chief friends now were Hogg and Peacock. Late in the year Shelley was preparing Alastor and a few minor poems for the press of Hamilton of Weybridge, from which the little volume issued early in 1816. On the 24th of January Mary's first son was born, They called him William in honour of Godwin, whose hard attitude did not prevent Shelley from esteeming him to be "glorious," though it was among the causes which induced the next decisive step—that of seeking a residence abroad. Early in May they started with the infant William and Claire Clairmont for Geneva, passing through Paris. Shelley and Mary were not aware that Claire was already among the many young lady intimates of Byron: nevertheless it was this circumstance that induced her to persuade Shelley to take her to Switzerland. Here, at Sécheron on Lake Leman, Byron and Shelley met. They boated together on the Lake, and saw each other constantly; and there can be no doubt that the contact with so great an intellectual energy must have had a powerful effect on Shelley. He and Mary visited Chamouni together; and the chief poetic outcome of this second visit to Switzerland is to be found in his _Mont Blanc (Lines written in the Vale of Chamouni)_ and the _Hymn to Intellectual Beauty_. He wrote some powerful descriptive letters to Peacock; and Mary kept a bright diary of incidents and impressions.

On the shores of Lake Leman, "Victor" had an opportunity of making some sort of restitution for the freedom which "Cazire" had taken with "Monk" Lewis's property. On the 20th of August Lewis, who was staying with Byron, indited a codicil to his will, framed to give protection to his negroes in the West Indies,—a codicil which reads as if it had been written under the influence of Shelley's enthusiastic philanthropy. At all events the terms of the codicil appear to have been discussed by Shelley, Byron, and Lewis in conclave; and Lewis's signature was witnessed by both of the great poets. This was not long before the end of the second visit to Switzerland, the record of which, the joint work of Shelley and Mary, was embodied in a little volume entitled History of a Six Weeks' Tour through a Part of France, Switzerland, Germany, and Holland: with Letters descriptive of a Sail round the Lake of Geneva, and of the Glaciers of Chamouni. It was not till the close of 1817 that this volume was published, though Shelley and Mary were back in England by the beginning of September 1816.

The intervening period was eventful. Not to speak of the negotiations in which Byron associated him with Mr. Kinnaird, for the publication of The Prisoner of Chillon, Manfred, and Canto III of Childe Harold, there was plenty to occupy the poet's mind, and harrow his feelings. While living at Bath he was startled by the tone of a letter from Fanny Godwin, Mary's half sister, the elder daughter of Mary Wollstonecraft. Fearing that this amiable girl, to whom Shelley was warmly attached, contemplated following her mother's footsteps in an attempt on her own life, he hurried to Swansea, but only in time to find Fanny already dead at the inn there.

This was early in October. In the following month, his health broken and his spirit utterly disquieted, he was further harassed by the disappearance of Harriett, whom he sought in vain, until at length, on the 10th of December 1816, she was found drowned in the Serpentine. When she had come to know that there was no hope of her husband's return to her, she had formed other ties: these in turn had failed her; her family had turned against her; and she had sought at length a refuge of which she had spoken often and complacently in her bright eccentric youth,—a refuge from such misery as a girl of twenty has to her lot when all the hopes of life have failed, and she has nothing to look forward to but an unhonoured, unsoothed, and unprotected motherhood. The rash generosity of Shelley aged nineteen had found him out when at twenty-three he found his poor little worldly, ambitious, disappointed wife, deserted by another, dishonoured, and dead. How should he be otherwise than smitten through with remorse, even though he did not regard himself as the author of this wretched coil and its tragic untying?

Whatever the quality and nature of his remorse, it did not prevent him—how, or why, should it?—from giving way to the pressure immediately brought to bear upon him by philosopher Godwin to make restitution and satisfaction by marrying Mary. Having done this somewhat unwillingly on the 30th of December 1816, he next sought to recover custody of the motherless Ianthe and Charles, whom he had left with Harriett at her own request. Again the Nemesis of his youthful rashness pursued him. The Westbrooks withheld the children from his care; and, on an appeal to the Court of Chancery, Lord Chancellor Eldon decided against him. While Shelley was busy about this matter in London, Mary was with Claire at Bath, where, on the 12th of January 1817, the trouble which had been maturing since the renewal of Claire's intimacy with the "Pilgrim of Eternity" had as Shelley meanwhile was getting more and more friendly with Leigh Hunt, through whom he became acquainted with Hazlitt, Keats, and Horace Smith. In March 1817 he moved his composite family to Marlow, in Buckinghamshire; and within a few days, as if settled there for ever, he issued a remarkable pamphlet under the pseudonym of “The Hermit of Marlow”—A Proposal for Putting Reform to the Vote throughout the Kingdom. It is a well-reasoned and temperate proposal for organizing a plebiscite, towards the cost of which he offered to contribute £1,000. With the issue of this pamphlet, Messrs. C. and J. Ollier became Shelley’s publishers; and he had a pretty brisk correspondence with them during this year 1817. There was plenty to distract his mind from the contemplation of late sombre events and the annoyances of the Chancery suit. His poetic activity was very high: not only did he write a considerable part of Rosalind and Helen and the fragments of Prince Athanase; but, as he floated in his boat on the Thames or haunted the woods of Bisham, he was occupied with the longest and perhaps the most ambitious of all his poems, Laon and Cythna, a work full of noble poetry and great “humanitarian enthusiasm” without being a great poem. In revolutionary dogma it goes beyond Queen Mab; and in order to startle the intelligent world into attention and get them to weigh the difference between crimes against nature and crimes against convention, Shelley chose to make his hero and heroine brother and sister. While the work was still in progress, on the 3rd of September 1817, Mary gave birth to a daughter, Clara; and in that same month the preface to her Frankenstein was written by her husband, though the work was published with the next year's date.

On the 6th of November the nation was thrown into agitation by the death of the Princess Charlotte in child-birth; and on this event Shelley, again using the pseudonym "The Hermit of Marlow," issued in the form of a pamphlet An Address to the People, with the epigraph "We pity the plumage but forget the dying bird." Its object was to protest against the execution for treason of Brandreth, Turner and Ludlam, which took place the day after the Princess's death. The wider and deeper protests of Laon and Cythna were not to be uttered without a somewhat harassing controversy. The Olliers, having the fear of the public and the Attorney-General before their eyes, demanded, after the book was printed and in part circulated, that it should be materially altered. Every passage in which the hero and heroine appeared as brother and sister was to be modified, and many antitheistic passages were to be softened down. Shelley strongly protested against the delay and enforced mutilation of his book, but at last gave in. By cancelling twenty-six leaves beside the title-page, the primeval loves of the brother and sister were transformed into the loves of two unrelated people brought up in one house, and Laon and Cythna became The Revolt of Islam. Shelley at this time believed himself to be a dying man, and was greatly in earnest about his poetic message of awakening. His failure first to get the poem duly published as written, and secondly to startle the public by it in its altered form, disappointed him keenly. The collapse of his endeavour to regain possession of Ianthe and Charles preyed also on his mind, for William and Clara might be taken too; and at length, convinced that England was no longer any place for him, he determined to put into execution a scheme which he had for some time entertained, namely to seek a more congenial climate and surroundings in that "paradise of Exiles, Italy." At the beginning of 1818, though his health was very bad, and he had an attack of ophthalmia, he busied himself in translating some of the Hymns of Homer. The day fixed on for the farewell to England was the 12th of March 1818; by the 4th of April Shelley, Mary, Claire, and the three infants had reached Milan; thence they passed to Como and Pisa, and, proceeding to Leghorn, fell in with Mr. and Mrs. Gisborne and Henry Reveley, Mrs. Gisborne's son by a former marriage.

The amiable and accomplished Maria Gisborne was an old friend of Mary's parents; and the time went pleasantly at Leghorn, whence, however, the exiles passed in the hottest weather to the Baths of Lucca. Shelley finished, at his wife's request, his eclogue Rosalind and Helen, translated the Banquet of Plato into English as transparently clear as it is gracious and characteristic, and wrote a portion of an introductory essay on the literature, arts, and manners of the Athenians. Byron's little Allègra was now placed in her father's custody. In August 1818 Shelley went to see him at Venice: they rode together daily on the Lido; and Shelley was again greatly impressed by his "eagle spirit," though much disliking his way of life. Byron's villa at Este, "I Cappuccini," was lent to Shelley and his family for a while; and there he drew the immortal portrait of Byron, shorn of all that was coarse and brutal in him, and those mingled reminiscences of his own story, which we meet in alternate beauty and terror in Julian and Maddalo. There, too, fresh sorrow was on his heels: the infant Clara was ailing seriously; her parents took her to Venice for advice; and, before relief could be got, the little sufferer, on the 24th of September, died in her mother's arms. This was a most severe blow to the young mother, who was passionately attached to her children, and saw in Clara a strong likeness to Shelley.

The Lines written among the Euganean Hills belong to this sojourn at Este; and Shelley was contemplating a tragedy (Tasso), of which but a fragment is extant, a lyrical drama based on the Book of Job, and his great work Prometheus Unbound, of which the first act was almost completed before the stay at Este came to an end early in November 1818. During a short halt at Rome on the way to Naples, he wrote the fragment of a tale called The Coliseum, peculiarly interesting for the essay in self-portraiture which it embodies, and recorded his impressions of the eternal city in letters which are happily preserved. At Naples that mysterious melancholy which induced the composition of the Stanzas written in Dejection near Naples did not prevent the exercise of his superb gifts as a descriptive letter writer; and the accounts of his visits to Vesuvius, Pompeii, Paestum, and other places, remain to us as models of all that is excellent and delightful in this kind. In the spring of 1819, near about the time of his return to Rome, a thin volume containing Rosalind and Helen, the Lines written among the Euganean Hills, the Hymn to Intellectual Beauty, and the Ozymandias sonnet, was published in London. He now revelled in the atmosphere, climate, and surroundings that he found at Rome. The antique statues and architectural monuments impressed him profoundly; and among the mountainous ruins of the Baths of Caracalla, overgrown as they were with shrubs and weeds and flowers, the poetic work given out kept pace with the splendour of the inspiration; for here the second and third acts of his Prometheus were completed. The scheme, indeed, was realized: the work as designed closes with the end of Act III; and it is only to the unexpended energy of a supreme effort in his creative life, and to the inextinguishable vitality of that optimism with which he regarded the destinies of man, that we owe that illustrious lyric achievement the fourth act of Prometheus Unbound, written after an interval of poignant sorrow and of large creation in another line.

While still at Rome Shelley obtained a manuscript account of that grim series of domestic transactions which took place in the family of Count Cenci during the pontificate of Clement VIII, transactions which ended in the murder of the murderous count and the execution of his wife, son, and daughter Beatrice. The portrait of a beautiful young woman, known as that of Beatrice Cenci, and in Shelley’s days attributed to Guido Reni, combined with the awful tale of oppression and parricidal vengeance to stimulate Shelley’s imagination in the highest degree. He saw in Count Cenci tyranny embodied in its foulest form, violating all that was most sacred; and in Beatrice he saw beauty and womanly dignity and innocence stung by that bestial tyranny into an attitude of overwhelming command, and impelled to compass the death of her destroyer even though he had given her life. Shelley did not defend directly or indirectly the deed of Beatrice and her accomplices, any more than he defended the bloody excesses of the French Revolution; on the contrary, he condemned in unmistakable terms the act which made Beatrice a tragic character; but he saw in the unutterable crimes of Cenci and the tremendous retaliation of his victims the true elements of a tragic coil and conflict such as the great Greek tragedians were wont to embody in those works with which he lived so much. He realized that to read the passions liberated in this conflict was to learn much concerning the secrets of the human heart; and he saw that, by making the actors in this sixteenth century tragedy live again on the modern stage, those wasted passions might be gathered into a possession of price for all time. The realization of what had passed in that sombre Cenci palace which he had visited charged his receptive imagination with electric turmoil. To the evolution of order from the troubled mass he brought a ripened judgment fresh from the great creative work of realizing a programme too vast for any but the highest genius to have succeeded in bringing into a single action; for it is the whole life of man and the final triumph of suffering and resistant good over tyrannous and seemingly omnipotent ill that his Prometheus depicts. That achievement had given keenness to his vision and strength to his will; and he saw before him as in a moving pageant the action of what was about to become the one great ideal tragedy of his time and country, the single tragic drama of the first order since Shakespeare.

Not at once, or at one series of sittings, did he accomplish his work of lessening the actual horror of the record and increasing its ideal horror, and so exalting his theme and his characters into an impressiveness not to be surpassed. About the middle of May he began the writing of his tragedy; but its progress was arrested after the lapse of some three weeks by the bitterest sorrow of his own life. His son William was taken dangerously ill. For sixty hours by the little bedside he kept unbroken watch, absorbed in the impending loss of his child. On the 7th of June 1819 the little fellow died. Almost heartbroken himself, and with the aggravation of his wife’s frantic grief, he left Rome and took Mary to a house between Leghorn and Monte Nero, Villa Valsovano, to be near Mrs. Gisborne. There, while that charming lady ministered in motherly fashion to the bereaved and suffering Mary, Shelley threw himself once more into that best of solacing worlds, the world of ideal creation, and not only finished his tragedy, but accomplished the arduous task of driving it through the press, notwithstanding all the obstacles that an Italian printing-house and compositors could put in his way.

The Cenci finished and dedicated to Leigh Hunt in a handsome large octavo volume, the Olliers instructed to publish it on its arrival in England, and Peacock besought to secure its representation on the London stage, Shelley’s mind was again free. Passing with Mary to Florence, he there set down in notes his delicate and fresh impressions of the Pitti and Uffizi antique sculptures. Throughout the greater part of 1819, and especially between his arrival at Florence and the birth of his son Percy Florence on the 12th of November, he must have done much lonely wandering and composition, as the mere mass of his work of this time testifies. Under the title Philosophical View of Reform he wrote a prose investigation of the causes of popular distress in England—a considerable work though left unfinished when he took up The Cenci in May. The "Manchester Massacre," as he called it, goaded him into the utterance of The Mask of Anarchy. The mental attitude of Wordsworth and the news that, on the eve of Peter Bell’s publication, John Hamilton Reynolds had produced a very witty spurious Peter Bell, combined to awaken Shelley’s sense of the ludicrous, and stung him into attacking the intellectual wastefulness of his great contemporaries in a satire which he called Peter Bell the Third. Of that unique satiric drama the Cyclops of Euripides he made a delightful poetic rendering. Some of his highest moods were recorded in the Ode to the West Wind, the stanzas To a Skylark, and the Ode to Liberty; and the delicate beauty of his imagination found expression in The Sensitive Plant, The Cloud, and Arethusa, not to mention other minor poems and fragments. At length the wondrous year’s work was crowned by that "tumult of mighty harmonies" where English song has soared into its highest altitudes and purest skies, the fourth act of Prometheus Unbound.

The course of his life and occupations from the stay at Este, where he began Prometheus, to the end of December 1819, when he finished the fourth act at Florence, should suffice to account for the flaw which unquestionably exists in the unity of the poem. Far fuller of great poetry and high thought than The Cenci, it yet leaves the tragedy in possession of the field as the one work of Shelley which, while dealing with a theme of the first order on a great scale and in a great manner, maintains a flawless unity of form and conception. Although The Cenci was interrupted in its flow for a brief period of overwhelming anguish, it had the good hap to be, itself, one of the most serious interruptions in the composition of Prometheus.

The Florentine winter tried the ailing health of Shelley; and he moved to Pisa, where he had the advantage of water which suited him and the advice of the physician Vaccà. By March 1820 the sheets of The Cenci had reached England, and the work had been duly published. The issue of Prometheus with a collection of his best lyric poems next engaged his attention; and his wife was dividing her time between her child, the cultivation of her own mind by Greek and other studies, and the transcription of those priceless poems in the production of which she took so sympathetic and serviceable an interest. In the summer Shelley and Mary passed some time at the house of the Gisbornes at Leghorn, while that worthy couple were on a visit to London. It was from her own house that the fortunate lady received the Letter to Maria Gisborne of immortal memory; and it was there that Shelley made his fascinating translation of the Hymn to Mercury called Homer's. It was August before Prometheus had come from Marchant's press in London and had been issued by the Olliers with The Sensitive Plant, Ode to Heaven, Ode to the West Wind, Ode to Liberty, The Cloud, the stanzas To a Skylark, and other pieces. The poet and his wife were now at the Baths of San Giuliano; and, after a short excursion of Shelley's to Monte San Pellegrino, he wrote that radiant fantasia The Witch of Atlas—a poem which has more than the octave stanza and sustained brilliancy and rapidity in common with the Hymn to Mercury, and which was thrown off in three days. Shortly afterwards, being much amused with the green-bag proceedings against Queen Caroline, and provokingly disturbed by the grunting of pigs at San Giuliano fair while he was reading his Ode to Liberty, he composed the satiric drama Edipus Tyrannus, or Swell-foot the Tyrant, in which the green-bag proceedings are grotesquely rendered, and a Chorus of the Swinish Multitude duly guards the interests of Liberty.

Returning to Pisa in the autumn, without Claire, who had taken a governess's situation at Florence, they formed an agreeable circle of friends, among whom were Mr. Tighe (the son of the authoress of Psyche), Lady Mountcashell, Count Taaffe, Prince Mavrocordato, the Improvvisatore Sgricci, Thomas Medwin, who reappeared in the Shelley circle as a captain of Dragoons, having seen service in India, and Francesco Pacchiani, who had been a University Professor at Pisa. Shelley's qualities in society were of a very rare kind. Although he did not like a crowd, and became reserved among numbers, he was joyous, vivacious, and eloquent amid a small gathering of those he liked. If argument arose, he was "clear, logical, and earnest in supporting his own views; attentive, patient, and impartial while listening to those on the adverse side." Hence he was more or less idolized by a select few at Pisa.

Horace Smith had charged himself with the anonymous publication of Edipus, which, not issued by the Olliers, had a brief and disastrous career in December 1820. Attacked at once by virtuous persons who saw ruin beneath its heterodox levity, it was allowed by Smith to be suppressed; and Shelley's mind passed on to higher things. Pacchiani introduced to the poet the Contessina Emilia Viviani, a motherless and most beautiful girl, whose father, marrying a second time, had consigned her to the charge of some nuns at Pisa. Shelley, struck by her great beauty and intelligence and moved by pity for what he regarded as her oppression, proceeded after his manner to robe her charming person in the radiant vestments of his own transcendent conceptions of physical, moral, and spiritual beauty. To say that he fell in love with her would be to accuse him wrongly of faithlessness to his wife. Still she occupied in his attentions a place which Mary, though on friendly and pleasant terms with Emilia, can scarcely have failed to begrudge her; and the superhuman strain of song which owed its origin ostensibly to Emilia was one on which the poet's widow maintained to the end a certain reserve. It was in fact Shelley yearning after ideal beauty and such flawless union and sympathy as perhaps no man and woman ever found, Shelley aspiring to set the passion of love in a rarer poetic atmosphere than any previously known to the realms of verse, Shelley and his ideal world and that world's ideal denizens, that formed the subject and inspiration of Epipsychidion. It was not Emilia Viviani who inspired that high strain, although it was she who for the moment served the poet as the Pygmalion's image upon which he clothed his subtle thoughts and soaring aspirations. But how should Mary, with the Pisan surroundings there in evidence, withdraw herself from the actual and enter with him into the new rare world of platonic conceptions irradiated by his own ætherial genius? And who shall blame if she did not quite like his having written a poem in which facts and phases of his life are called up in a kind of sublime astronomic pageant, transfigured, and translated into such song as no man had uttered before? But, whatever may be the natural and appropriate attitude for the poet's wife, there is no valid excuse for those critics who blame Shelley for writing, about love and the soul, a poem of which some part of the machinery leaves the reader at fault as to what particular passages in his life have entered by transfusion into the fabric of his verse. It is enough that Epipsychidion is an unbroken strain sung in the seventh heaven of pure poesy. Anyone whose curiosity demands that all the biographical bearings of a poem shall be clear to their apprehension should eschew the ideal world of Shelley's poetry and seek something more of the earth, earthy.

Those who desire to learn something of the workings of a poet's mind may gather more from Shelley's next considerable work than can be learnt of his life from Epipsychidion. That poem was written and re-written and despatched to Mr. Charles Ollier for publication by the middle of February 1821; and, while it was on its way to fulfil its immediate destiny of making another fruitless appeal to contemporary readers, the poet, who had dropped for the moment out of the blue platonic heights in which he had been airing and sunning his spirit's wings, entered the lists of controversy to defend Poetry against the misprisions of Thomas Love Peacock, whose Four Ages of Poetry had appeared in Ollier's Literary Miscellany. In February and March was written what exists of the posthumous Defence of Poetry; and, though not completed, the essay remains a model of prose expression, full of vigorous and piercing thought, and showing us as much as we can well expect to see of the poetic mind in the exercise of its high functions.

While Shelley was engaged on these two works in verse and prose he was growing in friendship—for his friendships grew rapidly—with Edward Ellerker Williams and the lady of his choice,—that Jane of whom Shelley said that the lady in The Sensitive Plant was a "pure anticipated cognition." She was by all accounts lovely, engaging and intelligent,—the "Magnetic Lady" who mesmerized the suffering poet free from pain, the "Miranda" to whom "Ariel" sent the historic guitar, the sympathetic friend who received from him several of those elusive delicately minor poems produced in his last year of work; and Williams, sailor first and then soldier, who had been introduced by Captain Medwin, was a frank, fearless, sea and river loving Briton, with enough intellectual distinction, and ample understanding and capacity, to make him a congenial companion for Shelley. As boys they had been at Eton together, Williams being a year or two younger than Shelley; but whether they remembered each other is not recorded. During the summer of 1821, when the Shelleys were again in residence at the Baths of San Giuliano, the Williamses and their two children were staying in a villa four miles away; and the intervening space was passed in both directions by means of a boat on the canal connected with the Serchio.

In the course of April Shelley had heard of the death of Keats, which had taken place on the 23rd of February 1821. As he ascertained and realized some of the circumstances and misunderstood or magnified others, his appreciation of all that was best in Keats’s work mingled with a flaming indignation against his calumniators; and during the first half of June he was pouring forth those feelings in the immortal death-song which many competent judges regard as his masterpiece. Adonais, an Elegy on the Death of John Keats, was sent to the press at Pisa, to be printed “with the types of Didot,” on the 16th of June: in a month’s time it was beautifully printed in quarto and done up in a tasteful sky-blue wrapper; and in due course it was consigned to Messrs. Ollier for publication. Less than a month after the completion of this labour of love which he did not care to entrust to other hands on its passage through the press, Shelley was visiting Byron at Ravenna, where that “Pythian of the Age,” as he had just been dubbed in Adonais, was then in residence.
Here Shelley learnt that a villainous accusation affecting his relations with Claire had been circulated; and it was not without characteristic cynicism that "Maddalo" made this communication to "Julian." Shocked beyond measure at this diabolical calumny, Shelley and Mary would fain have withdrawn into some island solitude such as the poet had painted in his Epipsychidion as the resort to which Emilia and her platonic lover were to flee. In default, they did their best to enlarge the inmost circle of Pisan friendships. It was arranged that Byron should migrate thither with his Countess Guiccioli; and the Shelleys, employed to find them a residence, selected the Palazzo Lanfranchi. Hunt was to come out from England and make his fortune in editing The Liberal, which was projected as a joint periodical production, verse and prose; and if Hogg, Peacock, and Horace Smith could be induced to join the circle, life would be almost endurable.

In September, Shelley journeyed with Mary and Claire to Spezzia, to find out what sort of a summer residence might be got on the coast thereabout. This was a holiday trip for Mary, who had just finished her historical romance Castruccio, Prince of Lucca (afterwards published as Valperga), with which Shelley was greatly delighted. The trip was in all respects a success. Meantime Prince Ypsilanti's proclamation of a free Greece, which had been issued in the spring, was producing stirring events. The current details of the Greek revolution of 1821, and the close companionship of Shelley with Ypsilanti's cousin Mavrocordato, inflamed at once the poet's ardent and reverent love for Hellas and his unquenchable devotion to the cause of freedom. By the end of October he had practically finished a play on the subject, modelled in a general sense after the Perse of Æschylus: the good companionable and serviceable Williams, who was thoroughly alive to the greatness of his poet friend, took Mrs. Shelley's place as amanuensis; and, as he made the fair copy, Shelley went carefully over it and finally fitted it for the press, as he had done with Mary's transcript of The Mask of Anarchy before sending it to Leigh Hunt. Thus written and revised, Hellas, a Lyrical Drama, was despatched on the 11th of November to Mr. Charles Ollier, to be "sent instantly to the printer," and to be published with a few notes and the stanzas Written on hearing the News of the Death of Napoleon. The poet's relations with his publishers were by this time becoming somewhat strained. Shelley complained of the difficulties raised about sending him proofs of his works; and his letters to Mr. Charles Ollier show a sense of grievance on the score of general neglect on the part of the agent for his principal's interests and wishes. By January 1822 Byron was established at Pisa with his household; and Shelley, who was constantly with him, riding, pistol-shooting, billiard-playing, and so on, had ample opportunity to realize the contrast between the attentions the two poets received from their respective publishers. In the middle of January he was still without any proofs of Hellas; and when at last copies of the completed book reached him in April he did not so much as know to what friend he was indebted for seeing it through the press of Messrs. S. and R. Bentley, the printers whom the Olliers employed on this occasion.
Meanwhile the Pisan band of choice spirits had had a strong and fascinating personality added to its ranks. Edward John Trelawny, a handsome, daring, sagacious young adventurer of a good Cornish family, had come from Switzerland to see with his own eyes the man who wrote Queen Mab. He came very near to seeing Shelley killed; for on one of the riding excursions with Byron and others it fell to Shelley's lot to stop a sergeant of dragoons who had jostled a member of the party, and who cut at the poet with his drawn sabre, knocked him off his horse, and would have done worse had he not been stopped by another member of the party riding up in time. Trelawny's tales of wonder on the deep and ashore, his strong, commanding manliness, and his intelligent and sympathetic adhesion to that brilliant circle, served Shelley in good stead in dividing the attention claimed by the splendid genius and powerful if not wholly lovable character of Byron. His lordship's treatment of the mother of Allègra was indeed near enough to becoming the ground of an open rupture between the two poets; and Byron's abuse of the power which his wealth and position gave him, to keep Claire from access to her little daughter, whom he had consigned to a convent to be cared for and educated, exasperated not only poor Claire, but also Shelley, who was sincerely and warmly attached to her. The restless apprehension of Claire constantly foresaw that the ignorant nuns of Bagnacavallo would be no fitting custodians for her child. She was convinced that the place was unhealthy, and that, in the event of epidemic malady, no attempt would be made by them to get the child removed; and those who knew Claire best dreaded some signal vengeance upon Byron as the first result of a fatal mischance to Allègra.

Shelley's chief literary work of this time, the historical drama of Charles I., flagged considerably. Perhaps the not unnatural restlessness of Mary's exacting and absorbing love for him, the difficulty of reconciling herself wholly to his strange, wayward, and impulsive manner of life, tended to discourage the prosecution of so large and continuous an undertaking. The very purity of his life and the consciousness of his loyalty to his wife may well have combined with his eager and expansive generosity and friendliness to render the conditions of existence in this remarkable Pisan circle trying for Mary, who indeed reproached herself later on with occasional coldnesses and blindnesses, which she doubtless exaggerated, and at all events could not help.

Shelley meanwhile, "blinded by excess of light," while alive to the tension of Mary's feelings, did not fully perceive the cause, and followed his impulses, whether to frequent his friends of either sex or to address them in strains of imperishable verse.

With the assistance and advice of Trelawny, Shelley and Williams determined to have for the approaching summer of 1822 a better boat than "the boat on the Serchio." The "Don Juan," a Torbay-rigged cutter, was built for them at Genoa. For their summer residence the two families took the Casa Magni, a house standing almost in the sea between Lerici and San Terenzio in the Bay of Spezzia. Claire accompanied the Williamses on the quest for a seaside residence; and, while Shelley and Mary were at Pisa, news came that the little Allegra had died of typhus fever. When the house was taken, Claire returned to Pisa, and would have gone to Florence; but Shelley would not break the news of her child’s death to her there, preferring that she should be first safely domiciled in the isolated villa on the coast. He persuaded her to be of the summer party, and despatched her, post-haste, with Mary and little William. He himself remained behind to pack up goods and chattels (for the Casa Magni was unfurnished); and he urged the Williamses to do the same. “Like a torrent hurrying everything in its course,” to use Mary’s own phrase, he defied all obstacles; and he reached Lerici only a day later than his wife. After a day or two it was necessary to break the news to Claire; and he and Mary had to soothe and quiet her as best they might.

The Casa Magni, like all other houses inhabited by Shelley, was for the time being a source from which those in distress might expect succour. At San Terenzio, as elsewhere, sickness in any house within his range was the signal for his departure on a mission of nursing and advice.

A fortnight or so after the arrival of the party at the villa, the “Don Juan” sailed into the bay; and Shelley and Williams, with a boy named Charles Vivian whose services they hired, had “a perfect plaything for the summer,” though a plaything which was not regarded by experts as a safe sea-going boat. Williams’s early experiences of the sea had not, it seems, been in Torbay-rigged cutters on a coast liable to sudden squalls; and they had been dulled by his subsequent service in the army: still, he was fairly apt at boat-management. Shelley, if anything so ætherial, and elf-like, and out of the common order of English beings, can be fitly described by a wholesome British term of tolerant and good-natured reproach, was the veriest land-lubber, rashly and helplessly enamoured of the sea, perilously addicted at all times to the navigation of waters familiar or unfamiliar, unable to swim, and deprived by his very fearlessness, and by his constant preoccupation in study or composition, of any chance of safety in such a boat as he now had at constant command. No wonder that Mary, out of health as she was, felt a sense of impending doom as she gazed on the ever-present sea and that wildly picturesque coast, the very beauty of which seemed to her preternatural and disturbing. The death of the little Allegra was anything but a matter of indifference to her, apart from anxiety about the bereaved mother; and Mary’s troubles culminated in a miscarriage, which was not far from being fatal. Her life was saved by Shelley’s promptitude and sagacity in the use of remedial means; but the cloud still hung over her spirit. Strangely enough, although one of her objections to the Magni house upon the coast was that she preferred “a more countryfied place,” the new boat in which Shelley passed the time upon the bay fascinated her. She was never wholly happy at this time, save when, the wind and weather not preventing, she lay in the boat with her head on her husband’s knee, as they scudded or floated between the sapphire deeps of the sea and the sapphire vault of the sky,—Shelley alternately reading his beloved Greek dramatists and committing his impressions to paper in verse to be treasured as long as English is spoken. It was in such conditions, with or without Mary, that he wrote that stately fragment The Triumph of Life, fraught with the ripened fruit of his thirty years' experience of life, and bearing the clear impress of that Italy in whose waters it was for the most part written; for it savours both of Dante and of Petrarch.

And now he was awaiting, not without impatience, the arrival of Leigh Hunt, who was expected to pass on ship-board within sight of Casa Magni. Shelley had written telling his friend of the white house with arches which he and Mary were inhabiting, and had bidden him cast his eye on the white house in passing and think of them. At length the news of Hunt's safe arrival in Italy with his family reached the Magni household. There was starting in hot haste for Leghorn—weighing of anchor and setting of sails on board the crank, spanking little cutter, which had been renamed the "Ariel,"—perfect plaything for a summer under cloudless skies and on stormless seas, safe means of conveyance from island to island in that ideal "blue Ionian weather" of Epipsychidion and in those "halyon" regions where "the treacherous ocean has forsworn its wiles." The stretch of sea from Lerici to Leghorn seemed almost to realize that radiant vision as Shelley and Williams and the boy Vivian cut through it in their toy and entered Leghorn harbour. The reunion of Shelley and Hunt was a real joy to both men. To Hunt, Shelley was the loftiest of poets, most lovable of men, a generous benefactor, a very present help in trouble. To Shelley, Hunt was an endearing companion, a stalwart champion of freedom, one who had suffered in purse and person for the faith, and who had further won upon the generous nature of Shelley by frankly accepting his material help. And now they were both under the same Italian sky, full of plans and projects; and it was Shelley’s part to make all smooth between Hunt and Byron.

Sorely enough did Mary and Jane begrudge the absence of Shelley and Williams on this more than ordinarily long voyage, and for the considerable number of days demanded for the needs of the business in hand. With the ailing and depressed Mary the sense of impending doom grew ever deeper as the days advanced. It was on the 1st of July that the “Ariel” set sail for Leghorn. By the 8th Shelley and Williams found themselves ready and anxious to return to Casa Magni. The wind was favourable; and, though the hot weather had been breeding electric disturbance, and the sky had a look which to the experienced in such matters meant mischief, Shelley knew better. The treacherous ocean had forswear its wiles; the merry mariners were bold and free; and between one and two o’clock the perfect plaything weighed anchor and set sail and was off and out of the safe harbour of Leghorn.

And now once more the poet knew the joy of waltzing along the sunlit sea, his mind lost in the contemplation of what the masters of song had produced in ancient days and in his own time, and his senses drinking delight from sea and sky. There were Williams and Vivian to look after the boat—Sophocles and Keats to occupy the thoughts of the lord of song who had sung the dirge of Keats. Hunt had lent Shelley the just published volume containing Lamia, Isabella, The Eve of St. Agnes, and most of Keats’s best short poems; and he had with him also a tiny pocket volume of Sophocles. Ten miles out at sea, off Via Reggio, the “Ariel” still held her way gallantly; but then at length, and all too suddenly, came the change of weather for which the old sea-dogs of Leghorn had been looking. A squall burst and swept across the very spot where the plaything scudded for Lerici; and, when it had passed, those who had been watching the sea saw all the other craft riding safely, but missed the “Ariel.” The volume of Keats, open at The Eve of St. Agnes, Shelley had doubled back, cover to cover, to thrust it in one pocket of his jacket; the volume of Sophocles was thrust into the other pocket. Williams made an attempt to get off some of his clothes and swim for it. Shelley, who could not swim, probably went down without a struggle in the fifteen fathoms of seething water which was again quiet and smiling almost as soon as that passionate life of love and light and song had quietly, and in the full joy of sensuous perception and spiritual activity, passed into the unknown.

There was no one to tell Mary and Jane that their husbands had been seen to perish. The uncertainty as to what had been the issue of the hapless voyage left the two women in an agony of suspense. The “Ariel” might have weathered the storm and be riding safely at anchor off Corsica or Elba; or the voyagers might have been swept on to some inhospitable stretch of coast, and be waiting to repair damages, unable meanwhile to communicate with their friends. At length the tense anguish of suspense was snapped: on the 18th of July the sea gave up its dead. All that remained of Shelley was thrown up near Via Reggio; all that remained of Williams, on the Tuscan coast some miles off. Later on the bones supposed to be those of Charles Vivian were also washed ashore. Buried at first where they were found, the remains of Shelley and Williams were afterwards cremated with due classic honours of wine and salt, oil and frankincense, through the enterprise and determined devotion of Trelawny, and in the presence of Byron and Leigh Hunt.

The Keats volume which Hunt had lent to Shelley was to have been returned in person when next they met. Its peculiarly soft paper, doubled outside its own binding, had gone to pulp and disappeared by the time the cremation took place. The binding was tendered to Hunt, who, with characteristic faith, declined to receive it, until he could take the book from Shelley in pursuance of their understanding. The remnant of the book was therefore thrown upon the poet’s pyre and burned with him. Trelawny watched the slow consumption of his friend’s body and noted that, when the frame divided and exposed the heart, that, more than other parts, opposed a stubborn resistance to the flames. Thrusting his hand into the fire he seized the heart and preserved it. When the cremation was complete, he gathered the ashes into a small casket; and in due time this casket was conveyed to Rome, where it was enclosed in a coffin and entombed in the Protestant burial-ground, near the Pyramid of Cains Cestius. The inscription on the flat stone placed above the ashes was brief and simple:—

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY
COR CORDIUM
NATUS IV AUG. MDCCXCH
OBIT VIII JUL. MDCCCXXII

"Nothing of him that doth fade
But doth suffer a sea-change Into something rich and strange."

It is not beneath that stone that the heart of hearts is enshrined, but at Boscombe Manor, where this and other relics scarcely less sacred are reverently preserved by Lady Shelley, widow of the poet’s son, Sir Percy Florence Shelley.
The widowhood of Mary Wollstonecraft
Shelley lasted until the 21st of February 1851, the day of her death. No woman was ever more faithful to the memory of her husband.
The world owes her a great debt. Her own striking intellectual gifts, and the high mental calibre of those among whom she had been reared, made her a sound critic and a keen observer of men and manners. Had she never met Shelley she would probably have shone among the nineteenth century’s remarkable women. But she was before all things womanly; and the chance that brought her into contact with Shelley really developed the purely feminine and emotional side of her character at least as much as it did the intellectual side. She, who knew Shelley in his maturity most intimately, adored his memory for nearly thirty years, and devoted herself to the rectification of his relations with the outside world which had misunderstood and under-valued him, and to the education and interests of his son. She had not only the mental gifts requisite for a sympathy in the poet's high aims and aspirations, not only the critical faculty to appreciate what his literary work meant and what its place was in English literature; but her heart, which had beaten for eight years close to his, knew and acknowledged that, as Shelley the poet had been the supreme lord of song in a prosaic world, as Shelley the propagandist had been through faith the lord of hope, so Shelley the man had been, to those who hung upon him or needed him, the lord of love.
QUEEN MAB;
A PHILOSOPHICAL POEM:
1813.

ECRASEZ L'INFAME!
Correspondance de Voltaire.

Avia Pieridum peragro loca, nullius ante Trita solo; juvat integros accedere fonteis;
Atque haurire: juvatque novos decerpere flores.

Unde prius nulli velarint tempora musæ.
Primum quod magnis doceo de rebus; et aretis Religionum animos nodis exsolvere pergo.

Lucret. lib. iv.

Δος ποῦ στῶ, καὶ κόσμον κινήσω.
Archimedes.

I. B
TO HARRIET * * * * *.

Whose is the love that, gleaming through the world,
Wards off the poisonous arrow of its scorn?
Whose is the warm and partial praise,
Virtue's most sweet reward?

Beneath whose looks did my reviving soul
Riper in truth and virtuous daring grow?
Whose eyes have I gazed fondly on,
And loved mankind the more?

HARRIET! on thine:—thou wert my purer mind;
Thou wert the inspiration of my song;
Thine are these early wilding flowers,
Though garlanded by me.

Then press into thy breast this pledge of love;
And know, though time may change and years may roll,
Each floweret gathered in my heart
It consecrates to thine.
QUEEN MAB.

I.

How wonderful is Death,
Death and his brother Sleep!
One, pale as yonder waning moon
With lips of lurid blue;
The other, rosy as the morn
When throned on ocean's wave
It blushes o'er the world:
Yet both so passing wonderful!

Hath then the gloomy Power
Whose reign is in the tainted sepulchres
Seized on her sinless soul?
Must then that peerless form
Which love and admiration cannot view
Without a beating heart, those azure veins
Which steal like streams along a field of snow,
That lovely outline, which is fair
As breathing marble, perish?
Must putrefaction's breath
Leave nothing of this heavenly sight
But loathsomeness and ruin?
Spare nothing but a gloomy theme,
On which the lightest heart might moralize?
Or is it only a sweet slumber
Stealing o'er sensation,
Which the breath of roseate morning
Chaseth into darkness?
Will Ianthe wake again,
And give that faithful bosom joy
Whose sleepless spirit waits to catch
Light, life and rapture from her smile? 30

Yes! she will wake again,
Although her glowing limbs are motionless,
And silent those sweet lips,
Once breathing eloquence
That might have soothed a tiger's rage
Or thawed the cold heart of a conqueror.
Her dewy eyes are closed,
And on their lids, whose texture fine
Scarce hides the dark blue orbs beneath,
The baby Sleep is pillowed:
Her golden tresses shade
The bosom's stainless pride,
Curling like tendrils of the parasite
Around a marble column.

Hark! whence that rushing sound?
'Tis like the wondrous strain
That round a lonely ruin swells,
Which, wandering on the echoing shore,
The enthusiast hears at evening:
'Tis softer than the west wind's sigh;
'Tis wilder than the unmeasured notes
Of that strange lyre whose strings
The genii of the breezes sweep:
Those lines of rainbow light
Are like the moonbeams when they fall
Through some cathedral window, but the teints
Are such as may not find Comparison on earth.
Behold the chariot of the Fairy Queen!
Celestial coursers paw the unyielding air;
Their filmy pennons at her word they furl,
And stop obedient to the reins of light:
These the Queen of spells drew in,
She spread a charm around the spot,
And, leaning graceful from the ætherial car,
Long did she gaze, and silently,
Upon the slumbering maid.

Oh! not the visioned poet in his dreams,
When silvery clouds float through the wildered brain,
When every sight of lovely, wild and grand Astonishes, enraptures, elevates,
When fancy at a glance combines
The wondrous and the beautiful,—
So bright, so fair, so wild a shape
Hath ever yet beheld,
As that which reined the coursers of the air,
And poured the magic of her gaze
Upon the maiden's sleep.

The broad and yellow moon Shone dimly through her form—
That form of faultless symmetry;
The pearly and pellucid car
Moved not the moonlight's line:
'Twas not an earthly pageant:
Those who had looked upon the sight,
Passing all human glory,
Saw not the yellow moon,
Saw not the mortal scene,
Heard not the night-wind's rush,
Heard not an earthly sound,
Saw but the fairy pageant,
Heard but the heavenly strains
That filled the lonely dwelling.
The Fairy's frame was slight, yon fibrous cloud,
That catches but the palest tinge of even,
And which the straining eye can hardly seize
When melting into eastern twilight's shadow,
Were scarce so thin, so slight; but the fair star
That gems the glittering coronet of morn,
Sheds not a light so mild, so powerful,
As that which, bursting from the Fairy's form,
Spread a purpurcal halo round the scene,
Yet with an undulating motion,
Swayed to her outline gracefully.

From her celestial car
The Fairy Queen descended,
And thrice she waved her wand Circled with wreaths of amaranth:
Her thin and misty form
Moved with the moving air,
And the clear silver tones,
As thus she spoke, were such As are unheard by all but gifted ear.

FAIRY.
Stars! your balmiest influence shed!
Elements! your wrath suspend!
Sleep, Ocean, in the rocky bounds
That circle thy domain!
Let not a breath be seen to stir
Around yon grass-grown ruin's height,
Let even the restless gossamer
Sleep on the moveless air!
Soul of Ianthe! thou,
Judged alone worthy of the envied boon,
That waits the good and the sincere; that waits
Those who have struggled, and with resolute will Vanquished earth's pride and meanness, burst the chains,
The icy chains of custom, and have shone
The day-stars of their age;—Soul of Ianthe!
Awake! arise!

Sudden arose
Ianthe's Soul; it stood
All beautiful in naked purity,
The perfect semblance of its bodily frame.
Instinct with inexpressible beauty and grace,
Each stain of earthliness
Had passed away, it reassumed
Its native dignity, and stood Immortal amid ruin.

Upon the couch the body lay
Wrapped in the depth of slumber:
Its features were fixed and meaningless,
Yet animal life was there,
And every organ yet performed
Its natural functions: 'twas a sight
Of wonder to behold the body and soul.
The self-same lineaments, the same
Marks of identity were there:
Yet, oh, how different! One aspires to Heaven,
Pants for its sempiternal heritage,
And ever changing, ever rising still,
Wantons in endless being.
The other, for a time the unwilling sport Of circumstance and passion, struggles on;
Fleets through its sad duration rapidly:
Then, like an useless and worn-out machine,
Rots, perishes, and passes.
FAIRY.
Spirit! who hast dived so deep;
Spirit! who hast soared so high;
Thou the fearless, thou the mild,
Accept the boon thy worth hath earned,
Ascend the car with me.

SPIRIT.
Do I dream? Is this new feeling
But a visioned ghost of slumber?
If indeed I am a soul,
A free, a disembodied soul,
Speak again to me.

FAIRY.
I am the fairy Mab: to me 'tis given
The wonders of the human world to keep:
The secrets of the immeasurable past,
In the unfailing consciences of men,
Those stern, unflattering chroniclers, I find:
The future, from the causes which arise
In each event, I gather: not the sting
Which retributive memory implants
In the hard bosom of the selfish man;
Nor that ecstatic and exulting throb
Which virtue's votary feels when he sums up
The thoughts and actions of a well-spent day
Are unforeseen, unregistered by me:
And it is yet permitted me to rend
The veil of mortal frailty, that the spirit Clothed in its changeless purity, may know
How soonest to accomplish the great end
For which it hath its being, and may taste
That peace which in the end all life will share.
This is the meed of virtue; happy Soul,
Ascend the car with me!
The chains of earth's immurement Fell from Fiaunhe's spirit;
They shrunk and brake like bandages of straw
Beneath a wakened giant's strength.
She knew her glorious change,
And felt in apprehension uncontrolled
New raptures opening round:
Each day-dream of her mortal life,
Each frenzied vision of the slumbers
That closed each well-spent day,
Seemed now to meet reality.

The Fairy and the Soul proceeded;
The silver clouds parted;
And as the car of magic they ascended,
Again the speechless music swelled,
Again the coursers of the air
Unfurled their azure pennons, and the Queen, Shaking the beamy reins,
Bade them pursue their way.

The magic car moved on.
The night was fair, and countless stars
Studded heaven's dark blue vault,—
   Just o'er the eastern wave Peeped the first faint smile of morn:—
The magic car moved on—
From the celestial hoofs
The atmosphere in flaming sparkles flew,
   And where the burning wheels
Eddied above the mountain's loftiest peak,
Was traced a line of lightning.
Now it flew far above a rock,
The utmost verge of earth,
The rival of the Andes, whose dark brow
   Lowered o'er the silver sea.
Far, far below the chariot's path,
  Calm as a slumbering babe,
  Tremendous Ocean lay.
The mirror of its stillness showed
  The pale and waning stars,
  The chariot's fiery track,
  And the grey light of morn
  Tinging those fleecy clouds
  That canopied the dawn.
Seemed it, that the chariot's way
Lay through the midst of an immense concave,
Radiant with million constellations, tinged
  With shades of infinite colour,
  And semicircled with a belt
  Flashing incessant meteors.

  The magic car moved on.
  As they approached their goal
  The coursers seemed to gather speed;
  The sea no longer was distinguished; earth
Appeared a vast and shadowy sphere;
  The sun's unclouded orb
  Rolled through the black concave;
  Its rays of rapid light
Parted around the chariot's swifter course,
  And fell, like ocean's feathery spray
Dashed from the boiling surge
  Before a vessel's prow.

  The magic car moved on.
  Earth's distant orb appeared
The smallest light that twinkles in the heaven;
  Whilst round the chariot's way
Innumerable systems rolled,
  And countless spheres diffused
An ever-varying glory.
It was a sight of wonder: some Were horned like the crescent moon;
Some shed a mild and silver beam
Like Hesperus o'er the western sea;
Some dashed athwart with trains of flame,
Like worlds to death and ruin driven;
Some shone like suns, and as the chariot passed,
Eclipsed all other light.

Spirit of Nature! here!
In this interminable wilderness
Of worlds, at whose immensity
Even soaring fancy staggers,
Here is thy fitting temple.
Yet not the lightest leaf
That quivers to the passing breeze
Is less instinct with thee:
Yet not the meanest worm
That lurks in graves and fattens on the dead
Less shares thy eternal breath.
Spirit of Nature! thou!
Imperishable as this scene,
Here is thy fitting temple.

II.

If solitude hath ever led thy steps
To the wild ocean's echoing shore,
And thou hast lingered there,
Until the sun's broad orb
Seemed resting on the burnished wave,
Thou must have marked the lines
Of purple gold, that motionless
Hung o'er the sinking sphere:
Thou must have marked the billowy clouds Edged with intolerable radiance
Towering like rocks of jet
Crowned with a diamond wreath.
And yet there is a moment,
When the sun's highest point
Peeps like a star o'er ocean's western edge,
When those far clouds of feathery gold,
Shaded with deepest purple, gleam
Like islands on a dark blue sea;
Then has the fancy soared above the earth,
And furled its wearied wing
Within the Fairy's fane.

Yet not the golden islands
Gleaming in yon flood of light,
Nor the feathery curtains
Stretching o'er the sun's bright couch,
Nor the burnished ocean waves
Paving that gorgeous dome,
So fair, so wonderful a sight
As Mab's ætherial palace could afford.
Yet likest evening's vault, that faery Hall!
As Heaven, low resting on the wave, it spread
Its floors of flashing light,
Its vast and azure dome,
Its fertile golden islands
Floating on a silver sea;
Whilst suns their mingling beamings darted
Through clouds of circumambient darkness,
And pearly battlements around Looked o'er the immense of Heaven.

The magic car no longer moved.
The Fairy and the Spirit
Entered the Hall of Spells:
Those golden clouds,
That rolled in glittering billows
Beneath the azure canopy,
With the ætherial footsteps trembled not:
The light and crimson mists,
Floating to strains of thrilling melody
    Through that unearthly dwelling, Yielded to every movement of the will.
Upon their passive swell the Spirit leaned,
And, for the varied bliss that pressed around,
Used not the glorious privilege
    Of virtue and of wisdom.

Spirit! the Fairy said,
    And pointed to the gorgeous dome,
This is a wondrous sight
    And mocks all human grandeur;
But, were it virtue's only meed to dwell
In a celestial palace, all resigned
To pleasurable impulses, immured Within the prison of itself, the will
Of changeless nature would be unfulfilled.
Learn to make others happy.   Spirit, come!
This is thine high reward:—the past shall rise;
Thou shalt behold the present; I will teach
    The secrets of the future.

The Fairy and the Spirit
Approached the overhanging battlement.—
    Below lay stretched the universe!
There, far as the remotest line
That bounds imagination's flight, Countless and unending orbs
In mazy motion intermingled,
Yet still fulfilled immutably
  Eternal nature's law.
    Above, below, around
The circling systems formed
A wilderness of harmony;
    Each with undeviating aim,
In eloquent silence, through the depths of space
Pursued its wondrous way.
There was a little light
That twinkled in the misty distance:
None but a spirit's eye
Might ken that rolling orb;
None but a spirit's eye,
And in no other place
But that celestial dwelling, might behold
Each action of this earth's inhabitants.

But matter, space and time
In those aërial mansions cease to act;
And all-prevailing wisdom, when it reaps
The harvest of its excellence, o'erbounds
Those obstacles, of which an earthly soul
Fears to attempt the conquest.

The Fairy pointed to the earth.
The Spirit's intellectual eye
Its kindred beings recognized.
The thronging thousands, to a passing view,
Seemed like an anthill's citizens.
How wonderful! that even
The passions, prejudices, interests,
That sway the meanest being, the weak touch
That moves the finest nerve,
And in one human brain
Causes the faintest thought, becomes a link
In the great chain of nature.

Behold, the Fairy cried,
Palmyra's ruined palaces!—
Behold! where grandeur frowned;
Behold! where pleasure smiled;
What now remains?—the memory
Of senselessness and shame—
What is immortal there?
Nothing—it stands to tell A melancholy tale, to give An awful warning; soon Oblivion will steal silently
The remnant of its fame.
Monarchs and conquerors there Proud o'er prostrate millions trod—
The earthquakes of the human race;
Like them, forgotten when the ruin
That marks their shock is past.

Beside the eternal Nile,
The Pyramids have risen.
Nile shall pursue his changeless way:
Those pyramids shall fall;
Yea! not a stone shall stand to tell
The spot whereon they stood!
Their very site shall be forgotten,
As is their builder's name!

Behold yon sterile spot,
Where now the wandering Arab's tent
Flaps in the desert-blast.
There once old Salem's haughty fane
Reared high to heaven its thousand golden domes;
And in the blushing face of day
Exposed its shameful glory.

Oh! many a widow, many an orphan cursed
The building of that fane; and many a father,
Worn out with toil and slavery, implored
The poor man's God to sweep it from the earth,
And spare his children the detested task
Of piling stone on stone, and poisoning
The choicest days of life,
To soothe a dotard's vanity.
There an inhuman and uncultured race
Howled hideous praises to their Dæmon-God;
They rushed to war, tore from the mother's womb
The unborn child,—old age and infancy
Promiscuous perished; their victorious arms
Left not a soul to breathe. Oh! they were fiends:
But what was he who taught them that the God
Of nature and benevolence hath given
A special sanction to the trade of blood?
His name and theirs are fading, and the tales
Of this barbarian nation, which imposture Recites till terror credits, are pursuing Itself into forgetfulness.

Where Athens, Rome, and Sparta stood,
There is a moral desert now:
The mean and miserable huts,
The yet more wretched palaces,
Contrasted with those ancient fanes,
Now crumbling to oblivion;
The long and lonely colonnades,
Through which the ghost of Freedom stalks,
Seem like a well-known tune
Which, in some dear scene we have loved to hear, Remembered now in sadness.
But, oh! how much more changed,
How gloomier is the contrast
Of human nature there!
Where Socrates expired, a tyrant's slave,
A coward and a fool, spreads death around—
Then, shuddering, meets his own.
Where Cicero and Antoninus lived,
A cowled and hypocritical monk Prays, curses and deceives.
Spirit! ten thousand years
Have scarcely passed away,
Since, in the waste where now the savage drinks
His enemy's blood, and, aping Europe's sons, Wakes the unholy song of war,
Arose a stately city,
Metropolis of the western continent:
There, now, the mossy column-stone,
Indented by time's unrelaxing grasp,
Which once appeared to brave
All, save its country's ruin;
There the wide forest scene,
Rude in the uncultivated loveliness
Of gardens long run wild,
Seems, to the unwilling sojourner, whose steps
Chance in that desert has delayed,
Thus to have stood since earth was what it is.
Yet once it was the busiest haunt,
Whither, as to a common centre, flocked Strangers, and ships, and merchandise:
Once peace and freedom bless'd
The cultivated plain:
But wealth, that curse of man,
Blighted the bud of its prosperity:
Virtue and wisdom, truth and liberty,
Fled, to return not, until man shall know
That they alone can give the bliss
Worthy a soul that claims
Its kindred with eternity.

There's not one atom of yon earth
But once was living man;
Nor the minutest drop of rain,
That hangeth in its thinnest cloud,
But flowed in human veins:
And from the burning plains
Where Lybian monsters yell,
From the most gloomy glens
Of Greenland's sunless clime,
To where the golden fields
Of fertile England spread
Their harvest to the day,
Thou canst not find one spot
Whereon no city stood.

How strange is human pride!
I tell thee that those living things,
To whom the fragile blade of grass,
That springeth in the morn
And perisheth ere noon,
Is an unbounded world;
I tell thee that those viewless beings,
Whose mansion is the smallest particle
Of the impassive atmosphere,
Think, feel and live like man;
That their affections and antipathies,
Like his, produce the laws
Ruling their moral state;
And the minutest throb
That through their frame diffuses
The slightest, faintest motion,
Is fixed and indispensable
As the majestic laws
That rule yon rolling orbs.

The Fairy paused. The Spirit,
In ecstasy of admiration, felt
All knowledge of the past revived; the events
Of old and wondrous times,
Which dim tradition interruptedly
Teaches the credulous vulgar, were unfolded
In just perspective to the view;
Yet dim from their infinitude.
The Spirit seemed to stand
III.

High on an isolated pinnacle;
The flood of ages combating below,
The depth of the unbounded universe
   Above, and all around Nature's unchanging harmony.

III.

Fairy! the Spirit said,
And on the Queen of spells
Fixed her ætherial eyes,
I thank thee. Thou hast given
A boon which I will not resign, and taught A lesson not to be unlearned. I know
The past, and thence I will essay to glean
A warning for the future, so that man May profit by his errors, and derive Experience from his folly:
For, when the power of imparting joy
Is equal to the will, the human soul
   Requires no other heaven.

MAB.

Turn thee, surpassing Spirit!
Much yet remains unscanned.
Thou knowest how great is man,
Thou knowest his imbecility:
Yet learn thou what he is;
Yet learn the lofty destiny
Which restless time prepares
For every living soul.

Behold a gorgeous palace, that, amid Yon populous city, rears its thousand towers
And seems itself a city. Gloomy troops
Of sentinels, in stern and silent ranks,
Encompass it around: the dweller there Cannot be free and happy; hearest thou not
The curses of the fatherless, the groans
Of those who have no friend? He passes on:
The King, the wearer of a gilded chain
That binds his soul to abjectness, the fool
Whom courtiers nickname monarch, whilst a slave
Even to the basest appetites—that man
Heeds not the shriek of penury; he smiles
At the deep curses which the destitute
Mutter in secret, and a sullen joy
Pervades his bloodless heart when thousands groan
But for those morsels which his wantonness Wastes in unjoyous revelry, to save
All that they love from famine: when he hears
The tale of horror, to some ready-made face
Of hypocritical assent he turns,
Smothering the glow of shame, that, spite of him,
Flushes his bloated cheek.

Now to the meal
Of silence, grandeur, and excess, he drags
His palled unwilling appetite. If gold,
Gleaming around, and numerous viands culled
From every clime, could force the loathing sense
To overcome satiety,—if wealth
The spring it draws from poisons not,—or vice, Unfeeling, stubborn vice, converteth not
Its food to deadliest venom; then that king
Is happy; and the peasant who fulfils
His unforced task, when he returns at even,
And by the blazing faggot meets again
Her welcome for whom all his toil is sped, Tastes not a sweeter meal.

Behold him now
Stretched on the gorgeous couch; his fevered brain Reels dizzily awhile: but ah! too soon
The slumber of intemperance subsides,
And conscience, that undying serpent, calls
Her venomous brood to their nocturnal task.
Listen! he speaks! oh! mark that frenzied eye—
Oh! mark that deadly visage.

KING. No cessation!
Oh! must this last for ever! Awful Death,
I wish, yet fear to clasp thee!—Not one moment
Of dreamless sleep! O dear and blessed Peace!
Why dost thou shroud thy vestal purity
In penury and dungeons? wherefore lurkest
With danger, death, and solitude; yet shun'st
The palace I have built thee? Sacred Peace!
Oh visit me but once, but pitying shed
One drop of balm upon my withered soul.

Vain man! that palace is the virtuous heart,
And Peace defileth not her snowy robes
In such a shed as thine. Hark! yet he mutters;
His slumbers are but varied agonies,
They prey like scorpions on the springs of life.
There needeth not the hell that bigots frame
To punish those who err: earth in itself
Contains at once the evil and the cure;
And all-sufficing nature can chastise
Those who transgress her law,—she only knows How justly to proportion to the fault
The punishment it merits.

Is it strange
That this poor wretch should pride him in his woe?
Take pleasure in his abjectness, and hug
The scorpion that consumes him? Is it strange That, placed on a conspicuous throne of thorns, Grasping an iron sceptre, and immured
Within a splendid prison, whose stern bounds
Shut him from all that's good or dear on earth,
His soul asserts not its humanity?
That man's mild nature rises not in war Against a king's employ? No—'tis not strange.
He, like the vulgar, thinks, feels, acts and lives
Just as his father did; the unconquered powers
Of precedent and custom interpose
Between a king and virtue. Stranger yet,
To those who know not nature, nor deduce
The future from the present, it may seem,
That not one slave, who suffers from the crimes
Of this unnatural being, not one wretch,
Whose children famish, and whose nuptial bed
Is earth's unpitying bosom, rears an arm
To dash him from his throne!

Those gilded flies
That, basking in the sunshine of a court, Fatten on its corruption!—what are they?
—The drones of the community; they feed
On the mechanic's labour: the starved hind
For them compels the stubborn glebe to yield
Its unshared harvests; and yon squalid form,
Leaner than fleshless misery, that wastes
A sunless life in the unwholesome mine,
Drags out in labour a protracted death,
To glut their grandeur; many faint with toil,
That few may know the cares and woe of sloth.

Whence, thinkest thou, kings and parasites arose?
Whence that unnatural line of drones, who heap
Toil and unvanquishable penury
On those who build their palaces, and bring Their daily bread?—From vice, black loathsome vice;
From rapine, madness, treachery, and wrong;
From all that genders misery, and makes
Of earth this thorny wilderness; from lust, Revenge, and murder......And when reason's voice,
Loud as the voice of nature, shall have waked
The nations; and mankind perceive that vice Is discord, war, and misery; that virtue
Is peace, and happiness and harmony;

When man's maturer nature shall disdain
The playthings of its childhood;—kingly glare
Will lose its power to dazzle; its authority
Will silently pass by; the gorgeous throne
Shall stand unnoticed in the regal hall,
Fast falling to decay; whilst falsehood's trade
Shall be as hateful and unprofitable
As that of truth is now.

Where is the fame
Which the vain-glorious mighty of the earth
Seek to eternize? Oh! the faintest sound
From time's light footfall, the minutest wave
That swells the flood of ages, whelms in nothing
The unsubstantial bubble. Aye! to-day
Stern is the tyrant's mandate, red the gaze
That flashes desolation, strong the arm
That scatters multitudes. To-morrow comes!
That mandate is a thunder-peal that died
In ages past; that gaze, a transient flash
On which the midnight closed, and on that arm
The worm has made his meal.

The virtuous man,
Who, great in his humility, as kings
Are little in their grandeur; he who leads Invincibly a life of resolute good,
And stands amid the silent dungeon-depths
More free and fearless than the trembling judge,
Who, clothed in venal power, vainly strove
To bind the impassive spirit;—when he falls,
His mild eye beams benevolence no more:
Withered the hand outstretched but to relieve;
Sunk reason's simple eloquence, that rolled
But to appall the guilty. Yes! the grave Hath quenched that eye, and death's relentless frost
Withered that arm: but the unfading fame
Which virtue hangs upon its votary's tomb;
The deathless memory of that man, whom kings
Call to their mind and tremble; the remembrance
With which the happy spirit contemplates.
Its well-spent pilgrimage on earth,
Shall never pass away.

Nature rejects the monarch, not the man;
The subject, not the citizen: for kings
And subjects, mutual foes, for ever play
A losing game into each other's hands,
Whose stakes are vice and misery. The man
Of virtuous soul commands not, nor obeys.
Power, like a desolating pestilence,
Pollutes whate'er it touches; and obedience,
Bane of all genius, virtue, freedom, truth,
Makes slaves of men, and, of the human frame,
A mechanized automaton.

When Nero,  180
High over flaming Rome, with savage joy
Lowered like a fiend, drank with enraptured ear
The shrieks of agonizing death, beheld
The frightful desolation spread, and felt
A new created sense within his soul
Thrill to the sight, and vibrate to the sound, Thinkest thou his grandeur had not overcome
The force of human kindness? and, when Rome,
With one stern blow, hurled not the tyrant down,
Crushed not the arm red with her dearest blood,
Had not submissive abjectness destroyed
Nature’s suggestions?

Look on yonder earth:
The golden harvests spring; the unfailing sun
Sheds light and life; the fruits, the flowers, the trees, Arise in due succession; all things speak
Peace, harmony, and love. The universe,
In nature’s silent eloquence, declares
That all fulfil the works of love and joy,—
All but the outcast man. He fabricates
The sword which stabs his peace; he cherisheth
The snakes that gnaw his heart; he raiseth up
The tyrant, whose delight is in his woe,
Whose sport is in his agony. Yon sun,
Lights it the great alone? Yon silver beams,
Sleep they less sweetly on the cottage thatch,
Than on the dome of kings? Is Mother Earth
A step-dame to her numerous sons, who earn
Her unshared gifts with unremitting toil;
A mother only to those puling babes
Who, nursed in ease and luxury, make men
The playthings of their babyhood, and mar
In self-important childishness that peace
Which men alone appreciate?

Spirit of Nature! no.
The pure diffusion of thy essence throbs
Alike in every human heart.
Thou, aye, ercestest there
Thy throne of power unappealable:
Thou art the judge beneath whose nod
Man’s brief and frail authority
Is powerless as the wind.
That passeth idly by.
Thine the tribunal which surpasseth
The show of human justice,
As God surpasses man.

Spirit of Nature! thou
Life of interminable multitudes;
Soul of those mighty spheres
Whose changeless paths thro' Heaven's deep silence lie; Soul of that smallest being,
The dwelling of whose life
Is one faint April sun-gleam;—
Man, like these passive things,
Thy will unconsciously fulfilleth:
Like theirs, his age of endless peace,
Which time is fast maturing,
Will swiftly, surely come;
And the unbounded frame, which thou pervadest,
Will be without a flaw
Marring its perfect symmetry.

IV.

How beautiful this night! the balmiest sigh,
Which vernal zephyrs breathe in evening's ear,
Were discord to the speaking quietude
That wraps this moveless scene. Heaven's ebon vault, Studded with stars utterly bright,
Through which the moon's unclouded grandeur rolls,
Seems like a canopy which love had spread
To curtain her sleeping world. Yon gentle hills, Robed in a garment of untrodden snow;
Yon darksome rocks, whence icicles depend,
So stainless, that their white and glittering spires Tinge not the moon's pure beam; yon castled steep, Whose banner hangeth o'er the time-worn tower
So idly, that rapt fancy deemeth it
A metaphor of peace; all form a scene
Where musing solitude might love to lift
Her soul above this sphere of earthliness;
Where silence undisturbed might watch alone,
So cold, so bright, so still.

The orb of day, 19
In southern climes, o'er ocean's waveless field
Sinks sweetly smiling: not the faintest breath
Steals o'er the unruffled deep; the clouds of eve Reflect unmoved the lingering beam of day;
And vesper's image on the western main Is beautifully still. To-morrow comes:
Cloud upon cloud, in dark and deepening mass,
Roll o'er the blackened waters; the deep roar
Of distant thunder mutters awfully;
Tempest unfolds its pinion o'er the gloom
That shrouds the boiling surge; the pitiless fiend,
With all his winds and lightnings, tracks his prey;
The torn deep yawns,—the vessel finds a grave
Beneath its jaggèd gulph.

Ah! whence yon glare
That fires the arch of heaven?—that dark red smoke
Blotting the silver moon? the stars are quenched
In darkness, and the pure and spangling snow
Gleams faintly through the gloom that gathers round!
Hark to that roar, whose swift and deaf'ning peals
In countless echoes through the mountains ring, Startling pale midnight on her starry throne! 40
Now swells the intermingling din; the jar
Frequent and frightful of the bursting bomb;
The falling beam, the shriek, the groan, the shout,
The ceaseless clangour, and the rush of men
Inebriate with rage:—loud and more loud
The discord grows; till pale Death shuts the scene,
And o'er the conqueror and the conquered draws
His cold and bloody shroud.—Of all the men Whom day's departing beam saw blooming
there,

In proud and vigorous health; of all the hearts
That beat with anxious life at sunset there;
How few survive, how few are beating now!
All is deep silence, like the fearful calm
That slumbers in the storm's portentous pause;
Save when the frantic wail of widowed love Comes shuddering on the blast, or the faint moan
With which some soul bursts from the frame of clay
Wrapped round its struggling powers.

The grey morn
Dawns on the mournful scene; the sulphurous smoke
Before the icy wind slow rolls away,
And the bright beams of frosty morning dance
Along the spangling snow. There tracks of blood
Even to the forest's depth, and scattered arms,
And lifeless warriors, whose hard lineaments Death's self could change not, mark the dreadful path
Of the out-sallying victors: far behind,
Black ashes note where their proud city stood.
Within yon forest is a gloomy glen—
Each tree which guards its darkness from the day Waves o'er a warrior's tomb.
I see thee shrink,
Surpassing Spirit!—wert thou human else?
I see a shade of doubt and horror fleet
Across thy stainless features: yet fear not;
This is no unconnected misery,
Nor stands uncaused, and irretrievable.
Man's evil nature, that apology
Which kings who rule, and cowards who crouch, set up
For their unnumbered crimes, sheds not the blood
Which desolates the discord-wasted land.
From kings, and priests, and statesmen, war arose,
Whose safety is man's deep unbettered woe,
Whose grandeur his debasement. Let the axe Strike at the root, the poison-tree will fall;
And where its venomed exhalations spread Ruin, and death, and woe, where millions lay Quenching the serpent's famine, and their bones
Bleaching unburied in the putrid blast,
A garden shall arise, in loveliness Surpassing fabled Eden.

Hath Nature's soul,
That formed this world so beautiful, that spread Earth's lap with plenty, and life's smallest chord Strung to unchanging unison, that gave
The happy birds their dwelling in the grove,
That yielded to the wanderers of the deep
The lovely silence of the unfathomed main,
And filled the meanest worm that crawls in dust
With spirit, thought, and love; on Man alone,
Partial in causeless malice, wantonly
Heaped ruin, vice, and slavery; his soul
Blasted with withering curses; placed afar
The meteor happiness, that shuns his grasp,
But serving on the frightful gulph to glare,
Rent wide beneath his footsteps?

Nature!—no!

Kings, priests, and statesmen blast the human flower

Even in its tender bud; their influence darts
Like subtle poison through the bloodless veins
Of desolate society. The child,

Ere he can lisp his mother’s sacred name,
Swells with the unnatural pride of crime, and lifts
His baby-sword even in a hero’s mood.

This infant-arm becomes the bloodiest scourge
Of devastated earth; whilst specious names,

Learnt in soft childhood’s unsuspecting hour,
Serve as the sophisms with which manhood dims

Bright reason’s ray, and sanctifies the sword

Upraised to shed a brother’s innocent blood.

Let priest-led slaves cease to proclaim that man

Inherits vice and misery, when force

And falsehood hang even o’er the cradled babe,

Stifling with rudest grasp all natural good.

Ah! to the stranger-soul, when first it peeps

From its new tenement, and looks abroad
For happiness and sympathy, how stern

And desolate a tract is this wide world!

How withered all the buds of natural good!

No shade, no shelter from the sweeping storms

Of pitiless power! On its wretched frame,

Poisoned, perchance, by the disease and woe

Heaped on the wretched parent whence it sprung

By morals, law, and custom, the pure winds

Of heaven, that renovate the insect tribes,

May breathe not. The untainting light of day

May visit not its longings. It is bound

Ere it has life: yea, all the chains are forged Long ere its being: all liberty and love
And peace is torn from its defencelessness;
Cursed from its birth, even from its cradle doomed
To abjectness and bondage!

Throughout this varied and eternal world
Soul is the only element, the block 140
That for uncounted ages has remained.
The moveless pillar of a mountain’s weight
Is active, living spirit. Every grain
Is sentient both in unity and part,
And the minutest atom comprehends
A world of loves and hatreds; these beget Evil and good: hence truth and falsehood spring;
Hence will and thought and action, all the germs
Of pain or pleasure, sympathy or hate,
That variegate the eternal universe. 150
Soul is not more polluted than the beams
Of heaven’s pure orb, ere round their rapid lines
The taint of earth-born atmospheres arise.

Man is of soul and body, formed for deeds
Of high resolve, on fancy’s boldest wing
To soar unwearied, fearlessly to turn
The keenest pangs to peacefulness, and taste
The joys which mingled sense and spirit yield.
Or he is formed for abjectness and woe,
To grovel on the dunghill of his fears, 160
To shrink at every sound, to quench the flame
Of natural love in sensualism, to know
That hour as bless’d when on his worthless days
The frozen hand of Death shall set its seal,
Yet fear the cure, though hating the disease.
The one is man that shall hereafter be;
The other, man as vice has made him now.

War is the statesman's game, the priest's delight,
The lawyer's jest, the hired assassin's trade,
And, to those royal murderers, whose mean thrones
Are bought by crimes of treachery and gore,
The bread they eat, the staff on which they lean.
Guards, garbed in blood-red livery, surround
Their palaces, participate the crimes
That force defends, and from a nation's rage Secure the crown, which all the curses reach
That famine, frenzy, woe and penury breathe.
These are the hired bravos who defend
The tyrant's throne—the bullies of his fear:
These are the sinks and channels of worst vice,
The refuse of society, the dregs
Of all that is most vile: their cold hearts blend Deceit with sternness, ignorance with pride,
All that is mean and villainous, with rage
Which hopelessness of good, and self-contempt,
Alone might kindle; they are decked in wealth,
Honour and power, then are sent abroad
To do their work. The pestilence that stalks
In gloomy triumph through some eastern land
Is less destroying. They cajole with gold,
And promises of fame, the thoughtless youth
Already crushed with servitude: he knows
His wretchedness too late, and cherishes
Repentance for his ruin, when his doom
Is sealed in gold and blood!
Those too the tyrant serve, who, skilled to snare
The feet of justice in the toils of law,
Stand, ready to oppress the weaker still;
And, right or wrong, will vindicate for gold,
Sneering at public virtue, which beneath Their pitiless tread lies torn and trampled, where Honour sits smiling at the sale of truth.

Then grave and hoary-headed hypocrites,
Without a hope, a passion, or a love,
Who, through a life of luxury and lies,
Have erept by flattery to the seats of power,
Support the system whencee their honours flow.

They have three words:—well tyrants know their use,
Well pay them for the loan with usury
Torn from a bleeding world!—God, Hell, and Heaven.

A vengeful, pitiless, and almighty fiend,
Whose mercy is a nickname for the rage
Of tameless tigers hungering for blood.
Hell, a red gulph of everlasting fire,
Where poisonous and undying worms prolong Eternal misery to those hapless slaves
Whose life has been a penance for its crimes.
And Heaven, a meed for those who dare belie
Their human nature, quake, believe, and cringe
Before the mockeries of earthly power.

These tools the tyrant tempers to his work,
Wields in his wrath, and as he wills destroys, Omnipotent in wickedness: the while Youth springs, age moulders, manhood tamely does His bidding, bribed by short-lived joys to lend Force to the weakness of his trembling arm.
They rise, they fall; one generation comes Yielding its harvest to destruction's scythe.
It fades, another blossoms: yet behold!
Red glows the tyrant's stamp-mark on its bloom, Withering and eankering deep its passive prime.
He has invented lying words and modes,
Empty and vain as his own coreless heart;
Evasive meanings, nothings of much sound,
To lure the heedless victim to the toils
Spread round the valley of its paradise.

Look to thyself, priest, conqueror, or prince!
Whether thy trade is falsehood, and thy lusts
Deep wallow in the earnings of the poor,
With whom thy master was;—or thou delight'st
In numbering o'er the myriads of thy slain, 241
All misery weighing nothing in the scale
Against thy short-lived fame: or thou dost load
With cowardice and crime the groaning land,
A pomp-fed king. Look to thy wretched self!
Aye, art thou not the veriest slave that e'er Crawled on the loathing earth? Are not thy Days of unsatisfying listlessness?
Dost thou not cry, ere night's long rack is o'er,
When will the morning come? Is not thy youth
A vain and feverish dream of sensualism?
Thy manhood blighted with unripe disease?
Are not thy views of unregretted death
Drear, comfortless, and horrible? Thy mind,
Is it not morbid as thy nerveless frame,
Incapable of judgment, hope, or love?
And dost thou wish the errors to survive
That bar thee from all sympathies of good,
After the miserable interest Thou hold'st in their protraction? When the grave 250
Has swallowed up thy memory and thyself,
Dost thou desire the bane that poisons earth
To twine its roots around thy coffined clay,
Spring from thy bones, and blossom on thy tomb,
That of its fruit thy babes may eat and die?

V.

Thus do the generations of the earth
Go to the grave and issue from the womb,
Surviving still the imperishable change
That renovates the world; even as the leaves
Which the keen frost-wind of the waning year
Has scattered on the forest soil, and heaped
For many seasons there, though long they choke, Loading with loathsome rottenness the land,
All germs of promise. Yet when the tall trees
From which they fell, shorn of their lovely shapes, Lie level with the earth to moulder there,
They fertilize the land they long deformed,
Till from the breathing lawn a forest springs
Of youth, integrity and loveliness,
Like that which gave it life, to spring and die.
Thus suicidal selfishness, that blights
The fairest feelings of the opening heart,
Is destined to decay, whilst from the soil
Shall spring all virtue, all delight, all love,
And judgment cease to wage unnatural war
With passion's unsubduable array.
Twin-sister of religion, selfishness!
Rival in crime and falsehood, aping all
The wanton horrors of her bloody play;
Yet frozen, unimpassioned, spiritless,
Shunning the light, and owning not its name,
Compelled, by its deformity, to screen
With flimsy veil of justice and of right,
Its unattractive lineaments, that scare
All, save the brood of ignorance: at once
The cause and the effect of tyranny;
Unblushing, hardened, sensual, and vile;
Dead to all love but of its abjectness,
With heart impassive by more noble powers
Than unshared pleasure, sordid gain, or fame;
Despising its own miserable being,
Which still it longs, yet fears, to disenthral.

Hence commerce springs, the venal interchange
Of all that human art or nature yield;
Which wealth should purchase not, but want demand,
And natural kindness hasten to supply
From the full fountain of its boundless love,
For ever stifled, drained, and tainted now.
Commerce! beneath whose poison-breathing shade
No solitary virtue dares to spring,
But poverty and wealth with equal hand
Scatter their withering curses, and unfold
The doors of premature and violent death,
To pining famine and full-fed disease,
To all that shares the lot of human life,
Which poisoned body and soul, scarce drags
the chain,
That lengthens as it goes and clanks behind.

Commerce has set the mark of selfishness,
The signet of its all-enslaving power,
Upon a shining ore, and called it gold:
Before whose image bow the vulgar great,
The vainly rich, the miserable proud,
The mob of peasants, nobles, priests, and kings,
And with blind feelings reverence the power
That grinds them to the dust of misery.
But in the temple of their hireling hearts
Gold is a living god, and rules in scorn
All earthly things but virtue.

Since tyrants, by the sale of human life,
Heap luxuries to their sensualism, and fame
To their wide-wasting and insatiate pride,
Success has sanctioned to a credulous world
The ruin, the disgrace, the woe of war.
His hosts of blind and unresisting dupes
The despot numbers; from his cabinet
These puppets of his schemes he moves at will,
Even as the slaves by force or famine driven,
Beneath a vulgar master, to perform
A task of cold and brutal drudgery;—
Hardened to hope, insensible to fear,
Scarce living pullies of a dead machine,
Mere wheels of work and articles of trade,
That grace the proud and noisy pomp of wealth!

The harmony and happiness of man Yields to the wealth of nations; that which lifts
His nature to the heaven of its pride,
Is bartered for the poison of his soul;
The weight that drags to earth his towering hopes,
Blighting all prospect but of selfish gain,
Withering all passion but of slavish fear,
Extinguishing all free and generous love
Of enterprise and daring, even the pulse
That fancy kindles in the beating heart
To mingle with sensation, it destroys,— Leaves nothing but the sordid lust of self,
The grovelling hope of interest and gold,
Unqualified, unmingled, unredeemed
Even by hypocrisy. And statesmen boast
Of wealth! The wordy eloquence that lives
After the ruin of their hearts, can gild
The bitter poison of a nation's woe,
Can turn the worship of the servile mob
To their corrupt and glaring idol fame,
From virtue, trampled by its iron tread,
Although its dazzling pedestal be raised 100
Amid the horrors of a limb-strewn field,
With desolated dwellings smoking round.
The man of ease, who, by his warm fire-side,
To deeds of charitable intercourse
And bare fulfilment of the common laws
Of decency and prejudice, confines.
The struggling nature of his human heart,
Is duped by their cold sophistry; he sheds
A passing tear perchance upon the wreck 109
Of earthly peace, when near his dwelling's door
The frightful waves are driven,—when his son
Is murdered by the tyrant, or religion Drives his wife raving mad. But the poor man,
Whose life is misery, and fear, and care;
Whom the morn wakens but to fruitless toil;
Who ever hears his famished offspring's scream,
Whom their pale mother's uncomplaining gaze
For ever meets, and the proud rich man's eye
Flashing command, and the heart-breaking scene
Of thousands like himself;—he little heeds 120
The rhetoric of tyranny; his hate
Is quenchless as his wrongs; he laughs to scorn
The vain and bitter mockery of words,
Feeling the horror of the tyrant's deeds,
And unrestrained but by the arm of power,
That knows and dreads his enmity.
The iron rod of penury still compels
Her wretched slave to bow the knee to wealth,
And poison, with unprofitable toil,
A life too void of solace to confirm
The very chains that bind him to his doom.
Nature, impartial in munificence,
Has gifted man with all-subduing will.
Matter, with all its transitory shapes,
Lies subjected and plastic at his feet,
That, weak from bondage, tremble as they tread.
How many a rustic Milton has passed by,
Stifling the speechless longings of his heart,
In unremitting drudgery and care!
How many a vulgar Cato has compelled
His energies, no longer tameless then,
To mould a pin, or fabricate a nail!
How many a Newton, to whose passive ken
Those mighty spheres that gem infinity
Were only specks of tinsel, fixed in heaven
To light the midnights of his native town!

Yet every heart contains perfection's germ:
The wisest of the sages of the earth,
That ever from the stores of reason drew Science and truth, and virtue's dreadless tone,
Were but a weak and inexperienced boy,
Proud, sensual, unimpassioned, unimbued
With pure desire and universal love,
Compared to that high being, of cloudless brain, Untainted passion, elevated will,
Which death (who even would linger long in awe Within his noble presence, and beneath His changeless eyebeam) might alone subdue.
Him, every slave now dragging through the filth
Of some corrupted city his sad life,
Pining with famine, swol'n with luxury,
Blunting the keenness of his spiritual sense
With narrow schemings and unworthy cares,
Or madly rushing through all violent crime,
To move the deep stagnation of his soul,—
Might imitate and equal.

But mean lust
Has bound its chains so tight around the earth,
That all within it but the virtuous man
Is venal: gold or fame will surely reach
The price prefixed by selfishness, to all But him of resolute and unchanging will;
Whom, nor the plaudits of a servile crowd,
Nor the vile joys of tainting luxury,
Can bribe to yield his elevated soul
To tyranny or falsehood, though they wield
With blood-red hand the sceptre of the world.

All things are sold: the very light of heaven
Is venal; earth's unsparing gifts of love,
The smallest and most despicable things
That lurk in the abysses of the deep,
All objects of our life, even life itself,
And the poor pittance which the laws allow
Of liberty, the fellowship of man,
Those duties which his heart of human love
Should urge him to perform instinctively,
Are bought and sold as in a public mart
Of undisguising selfishness, that sets
On each its price, the stamp-mark of her reign.
Even love is sold; the solace of all woe
Is turned to deadliest agony; old age
Shivers in selfish beauty's loathing arms;
And youth's corrupted impulses prepare
A life of horror from the blighting bane
Of commerce; whilst the pestilence that springs
From unenjoying sensualism has filled
All human life with hydra-headed woes.
Falsehood demands but gold to pay the pangs
Of outraged conscience; for the slavish priest
Sets no great value on his hireling faith:
A little passing pomp, some servile souls,
Whom cowardice itself might safely chain,
Or the spare mite of avarice could bribe
To deck the triumph of their languid bribe,
Can make him minister to tyranny.
More daring crime requires a loftier meed:
Without a shudder, the slave-soldier lends
His arm to murderous deeds, and steels his heart,
When the dread eloquence of dying men,
Low mingling on the lonely field of fame,
Assails that nature, whose applause he sells
For the gross blessings of a patriot mob,
For the vile gratitude of heartless kings,
And for a cold world's good word,—viler still!

There is a nobler glory, which survives
Until our being fades, and, solacing
All human care, accompanies its change;
Deserts not virtue in the dungeon's gloom,
And, in the precincts of the palace, guides
Its footsteps through that labyrinth of crime;
Imbues his lineaments with dauntlessness,
Even when, from power's avenging hand, he takes Its sweetest, last and noblest title—death;
—The consciousness of good, which neither gold,
Nor sordid fame, nor hope of heavenly bliss,
Can purchase; but a life of resolute good,
Unalterable will, quenchless desire
Of universal happiness, the heart
That beats with it in unison, the brain,
Whose ever wakeful wisdom toils to change
Reason's rich stores for its eternal weal.

This commerce of sincerest virtue needs
No mediative signs of selfishness,
No jealous intercourse of wretched gain,
No balancings of prudence, cold and long;
In just and equal measure all is weighed,
One scale contains the sum of human weal,
And one, the good man's heart.

How vainly seek
The selfish for that happiness denied To aught but virtue! Blind and hardened, they,
Who hope for peace amid the storms of care,
Who covet power they know not how to use,
And sigh for pleasure they refuse to give,— Madly they frustrate still their own designs;
And, where they hope that quiet to enjoy
Which virtue pictures, bitterness of soul,
Pining regrets, and vain repentances,
Disease, disgust, and lassitude, pervade
Their valueless and miserable lives.

But hoary-headed selfishness has felt
Its death-blow, and is tottering to the grave:
A brighter morn awaits the human day,
When every transfer of earth's natural gifts
Shall be a commerce of good words and works;
When poverty and wealth, the thirst of fame,
The fear of infamy, disease and woe,
War with its million horrors, and fierce hell
Shall live but in the memory of Time,
Who, like a penitent libertine, shall start,
Look back, and shudder at his younger years.
VI.

All touch, all eye, all ear,
The Spirit felt the Fairy’s burning speech.
O’er the thin texture of its frame,
The varying periods painted changing glows,
As on a summer even,
When soul-enfolding music floats around,
The stainless mirror of the lake
Re-images the eastern gloom,
Mingling convulsively its purple hues
With sunset’s burnished gold.

Then thus the Spirit spoke:
It is a wild and miserable world!
Thorny, and full of care,
Which every fiend can make his prey at will.
O Fairy! in the lapse of years,
Is there no hope in store?
Will yon vast suns roll on Interminably, still illumining
The night of so many wretched souls,
And see no hope for them?
Will not the universal Spirit e’er Revivify this withered limb of Heaven?

The Fairy calmly smiled
In comfort, and a kindling gleam of hope Suffused the Spirit’s lineaments.
Oh! rest thee tranquil; chase those fearful doubts,
Which ne’er could rack an everlasting soul,
That sees the chains which bind it to its doom.
Yes! crime and misery are in yonder earth,
Falsehood, mistake, and lust;
But the eternal world
Contains at once the evil and the cure.
Some eminent in virtue shall start up,
   Even in perversest time:
The truths of their pure lips, that never die,
Shall bind the scorpion falsehood with a wreath
   Of ever-living flame,
Until the monster sting itself to death.

How sweet a scene will earth become!
Of purest spirits, a pure dwelling-place,
Symphionious with the planetary spheres;
When man, with changeless nature coalescing,
Will undertake regeneration's work,
When its umgenial poles no longer point
   To the red and baleful sun
    That faintly twinkles there.

Spirit! on yonder earth,
   Falsehood now triumphs; deadly power
Has fixed its seal upon the lip of truth!
   Madness and misery are there!
The happiest is most wretched! Yet confide,
Until pure health-drops, from the cup of joy,
Fall like a dew of balm upon the world.
Now, to the scene I show, in silence turn,
And read the blood-stained charter of all woe,
Which nature soon, with recreating hand,
Will blot in mercy from the book of earth.
How bold the flight of passion's wandering wing,
How swift the step of reason's firmer tread,
How calm and sweet the victories of life,
How terrorless the triumph of the grave!
How powerless were the mightiest monarch's arm,
Vain his loud threat, and impotent his frown!
How ludicrous the priest's dogmatic roar!
The weight of his exterminating curse,
How light! and his affected charity,
To suit the pressure of the changing times,
What palpable deceit!—but for thy aid,
Religion! but for thee, prolific fiend,
Who peoplest earth with daemons, hell with men,
And heaven with slaves!

Thou taintest all thou lookest upon!—the stars,
Which on thy cradle beamed so brightly sweet,
Were gods to the distempered playfulness
Of thy untutored infancy: the trees,
The grass, the clouds, the mountains, and the sea,
All living things that walk, swim, creep, or fly,
Were gods: the sun had homage, and the moon
Her worshipper. Then thou becamest, a boy,
More daring in thy frenzies: every shape,
Monstrous or vast, or beautifully wild,
Which, from sensation's relics, fancy culls;
The spirit of the air, the shuddering ghost,
The genii of the elements, the powers
That give a shape to nature's varied works,
Had life and place in the corrupt belief
Of thy blind heart: yet still thy youthful hands Were pure of human blood. Then manhood gave Its strength and ardour to thy frenzied brain;
Thine eager gaze scanned the stupendous scene,
Whose wonders mocked the knowledge of thy pride:
Their everlasting and unchanging laws
Reproached thine ignorance. Awhile thou stood'st Baffled and gloomy; then thou didst sum up
The elements of all that thou didst know;
The changing seasons, winter's leafless reign,
The budding of the heaven-breathing trees,
The eternal orbs that beautify the night,
The sunrise, and the setting of the moon,
Earthquakes and wars, and poisons and disease,
And all their causes, to an abstract point,
Converging, thou didst bend and called it God!
The self-sufficing, the omnipotent,
The merciful, and the avenging God!
Who, prototype of human misrule, sits
High in heaven's realm, upon a golden throne,
Even like an earthly king; and whose dread work,
Hell, gapes for ever for the unhappy slaves
Of fate, whom he created, in his sport,
To triumph in their torments when they fell!
Earth heard the name; earth trembled, as the smoke
Of his revenge ascended up to heaven,
Blotting the constellations; and the cries
Of millions, butchered in sweet confidence
And unsuspecting peace, even when the bonds
Of safety were confirmed by wordy oaths
Sworn in his dreadful name, rung through the land;
Whilst innocent babes writhed on thy stubborn spear,
And thou didst laugh to hear the mother's shriek
Of maniac gladness, as the sacred steel
Felt cold in her torn entrails!

Religion! thou wert then in manhood's prime:
But age crept on: one God would not suffice
For senile puerility; thou framedst
A tale to suit thy dotage, and to glut Thy misery-thirsting soul, that the mad fiend
Thy wickedness had pictured might afford
A plea for sating the unnatural thirst
For murder, rapine, violence, and crime,
That still consumed thy being, even when Thou heard'st the step of fate;—that, flames might light Thy funeral scene, and the shrill horrent shrieks
Of parents dying on the pile that burned
To light their children to thy paths, the roar
Of the encircling flames, the exulting cries
Of thine apostles, loud commingling there, Might sate thine hungry ear
    Even on the bed of death!

But now contempt is mocking thy grey hairs;
Thou art descending to the darksome grave, Unhonoured and unpitied, but by those Whose pride is passing by like thine, and sheds
Like thine a glare that fades before the sun
Of truth, and shines but in the dreadful night
That long has lowered above the ruined world.

Throughout these infinite orbs of mingling light,
Of which yon earth is one, is wide diffused
A spirit of activity and life,
That knows no term, cessation, or decay;
That fades not when the lamp of earthly life,
Extinguished in the dampness of the grave,
Awhile there slumbers, more than when the babe
In the dim newness of its being feels
The impulses of sublunary things,
And all is wonder to unpractised sense:
But, active, steadfast, and eternal, still Guides the fierce whirlwind, in the tempest roars, Cheers in the day, breathes in the balmy groves,
Strengthens in health, and poisons in disease;
And in the storm of change, that ceaselessly
Rolls round the eternal universe, and shakes

I. E
Its undecaying battlement, presides, Apportioning with irresistible law
The place each spring of its machine shall fill;
So that, when waves on waves tumultuous heap Confusion to the clouds, and fiercely driven Heaven’s lightnings scorched the uprooted ocean-foreds, Whilst, to the eye of shipwrecked mariner,
Lone sitting on the bare and shuddering rock,
All seems unlinked contingency and chance,—
No atom of this turbulence fulfils
A vague and unnecessitated task,
Or acts but as it must and ought to act.
Even the minutest molecule of light,
That in an April sunbeam’s fleeting glow
Fulfils its destined though invisible work,
The universal Spirit guides; nor less,
When merciless ambition, or mad zeal,
Has led two hosts of dupes to battle-field,
That, blind, they there may dig each other’s graves,
And call the sad work glory, does it rule
All passions: not a thought, a will, an act,
No working of the tyrant’s moody mind,
Nor one misgiving of the slaves who boast
Their servitude, to hide the shame they feel, Nor the events enchaining every will,
That from the depths of unrecorded time
Have drawn all-influencing virtue, pass
Unrecognized, or unforeseen by thee,
Soul of the Universe! eternal spring
Of life and death, of happiness and woe,
Of all that chequers the phantasmal scene
That floats before our eyes in wavering light,
Which gleams but on the darkness of our prison,
Whose chains and massy walls
We feel, but cannot see.
VI.]

QUEEN MAB. 51

Spirit of Nature! all-sufficing Power,
Necessity! thou mother of the world!
Unlike the God of human error, thou Requir’st no prayers or praises; the caprice
Of man’s weak will belongs no more to thee
Than do the changeful passions of his breast
To thy unvarying harmony: the slave,
Whose horrible lusts spread misery o’er the world,
And the good man, who lifts, with virtuous pride,
His being, in the sight of happiness
That springs from his own works; the poison-tree, Beneath whose shade all life is withered up,
And the fair oak, whose leafy dome affords
A temple where the vows of happy love
Are registered, are equal in thy sight:
No love, no hate thou cherishest; revenge
And favouritism, and worst desire of fame Thou know’st not: all that the wide world contains Are but thy passive instruments, and thou Regard’st them all with an impartial eye,
Whose joy or pain thy nature cannot feel,
Because thou hast not human sense,
Because thou art not human mind.

Yes! when the sweeping storm of time
Has sung its death-dirge o’er the ruined fanes
And broken altars of the almighty fiend,
Whose name usurps thy honours, and the blood
Through centuries clotted there has floated down
The tainted flood of ages, shalt thou live Unchangeable! A shrine is raised to thee,
Which, nor the tempest breath of time,
Nor the interminable flood,
Over earth's slight pageant rolling,
Availeth to destroy,—

The sensitive extension of the world.

That wondrous and eternal fane,
Where pain and pleasure, good and evil join,
To do the will of strong necessity,
And life, in multitudinous shapes,
Still pressing forward where no term can be,
Like hungry and unresting flame
Curls round the eternal columns of its strength.

VII.

SPIRIT.

I was an infant when my mother went To see an atheist burned. She took me there:
The dark-robed priests were met around the pile;
The multitude was gazing silently;
And, as the culprit passed with dauntless mien,
Tempered disdain in his unaltering eye,
Mixed with a quiet smile, shone calmly forth:
The thirsty fire crept round his manly limbs;
His resolute eyes were scorched to blindness soon;
His death-pang rent my heart! the insensate mob Uttered a cry of triumph, and I wept.
Weep not, child! cried my mother, for that man
Has said, There is no God.

FAIRY.

There is no God!
Nature confirms the faith his death-groan sealed:
Let heaven and earth, let man's revolving race,
His ceaseless generations tell their tale;
Let every part depending on the chain
That links it to the whole, point to the hand
That grasps its term! let every seed that falls
In silent eloquence unfold its store
Of argument: infinity within,
Infinity without, belie creation;
The exterminable spirit it contains Is nature's only God; but human pride
Is skilful to invent most serious names
To hide its ignorance.

The name of God
Has fenced about all crime with holiness,
Himself the creature of his worshippers,
Whose names and attributes and passions change,
Seeva, Buddh, Foh, Jehovah, God, or Lord,
Even with the human dupes who build his shrines,
Still serving o'er the war-polluted world
For desolation's watch-word; whether hosts Stain his death-blushing chariot-wheels, as on Triumphantly they roll, whilst Brahmins raise
A sacred hymn to mingle with the groans;
Or countless partners of his power divide
His tyranny to weakness; or the smoke
Of burning towns, the cries of female helplessness, Unarmed old age, and youth, and infancy,
Horribly massacred, ascend to heaven
In honour of his name; or, last and worst,
Earth groans beneath religion's iron age,
And priests dare babble of a God of peace,
Even whilst their hands are red with guiltless blood, Murdering the while, uprooting every germ
Of truth, exterminating, spoiling all,
Making the earth a slaughter-house!

O Spirit! through the sense
By which thy inner nature was apprised
Of outward shows, vague dreams have rolled.
And varied reminiscences have waked
Tablets that never fade;
All things have been imprinted there,
The stars, the sea, the earth, the sky,
Even the unshapeliest lineaments
Of wild and fleeting visions
Have left a record there
To testify of earth.

These are my empire, for to me is given
The wonders of the human world to keep,
And fancy's thin creations to endow
With manner, being, and reality;
Therefore a wondrous phantom from the dreams
Of human error's dense and purblind faith,
I will evoke, to meet thy questioning.

Ahasuerus, rise!

A strange and woe-worn wight
Arose beside the battlement,
And stood unmoving there.
His inessential figure cast no shade
Upon the golden floor;
His port and mien bore mark of many years,
And chronicles of untold ancientness
Were legible within his beamless eye:
Yet his cheek bore the mark of youth;
Freshness and vigour knit his manly frame;
The wisdom of old age was mingled there
With youth's primeval dauntlessness;
And inexpressible woe,
Chastened by fearless resignation, gave An awful grace to his all-speaking brow.

SPIRIT.
Is there a God?

AHASUERUS.
Is there a God!—aye, an almighty God,
And vengeful as almighty! Once his voice Was heard on earth: earth shuddered at the sound;
The fiery-visaged firmament expressed
Abhorrence, and the grave of nature yawned
To swallow all the dauntless and the good
That dared to hurl defiance at his throne, Girt as it was with power. None but slaves Survived,—cold-blooded slaves who did the work
Of tyrannous omnipotence; whose souls
No honest indignation ever urged
To elevated daring, to one deed
Which gross and sensual self did not pollute.
These slaves built temples for the omnipotent fiend,
Gorgeous and vast: the costly altars smoked
With human blood, and hideous pæans rung Through all the long-drawn aisles. A murderer heard
His voice in Egypt, one whose gifts and arts
Had raised him to his eminence in power,
Accomplice of omnipotence in crime,
And confidant of the all-knowing one.
These were Jehovah's words.

From an eternity of idleness
I, God, awoke; in seven days' toil made earth
From nothing; rested, and created man:
I placed him in a paradise, and there Planted the tree of evil, so that he Might eat and perish, and my soul procure Wherewith to sate its malice, and to turn,
Even like a heartless conquerer of the earth,
All misery to my fame. The race of men
Chosen to my honour, with impunity
May sate the lusts I planted in their heart.
Here I command thee hence to lead them on,
Until, with hardened feet, their conquering troops
Wade on the promised soil through woman's blood,
And make my name be dreaded through the land.
Yet ever burning flame and ceaseless woe
Shall be the doom of their eternal souls,
With every soul on this ungrateful earth,
Virtuous or vicious, weak or strong,—even all Shall perish, to fulfil the blind revenge (Which you, to men, call justice) of their God.

The murderer's brow
Quivered with horror.
God omnipotent,
Is there no mercy? must our punishment
Be endless? will long ages roll away,
And see no term? Oh! wherefore hast thou made
In mockery and wrath this evil earth?
Mercy becomes the powerful—be but just:
O God! repent and save.

One way remains:
I will beget a son, and he shall bear
The sins of all the world; he shall arise
In an unnoticed corner of the earth,
And there shall die upon a cross, and purge
The universal crime; so that the few
On whom my grace descends, those who are marked
As vessels to the honour of their God,
May eredit this strange sacrifice, and save
Their souls alive: millions shall live and die,
Who ne'er shall call upon their Saviour's name,
But, unredeemed, go to the gaping grave.
Thousands shall deem it an old woman's tale,
Such as the nurses frighten babes withal:
These in a gulph of anguish and of flame
Shall curse their reprobation endlessly,
Yet tenfold pangs shall force them to avow,
Even on their beds of torment, where they howl,
My honour and the justice of their doom.
What then avail their virtuous deeds, their thoughts
Of purity, with radiant genius bright,
Or lit with human reason's earthly ray?
Many are called, but few will I elect.
Do thou my bidding, Moses!
Even the murderer's cheek
Was blanched with horror, and his quivering lips Scarce faintly uttered—O almighty one,
I tremble and obey!

O Spirit! centuries have set their seal
On this heart of many wounds, and loaded brain, Since the Incarnate came: humbly he came,
Veiling his horrible Godhead in the shape
Of man, scorned by the world, his name unheard,
Save by the rabble of his native town, Even as a parish demagogue. He led
The crowd; he taught them justice, truth and peace,
In semblance; but he lit within their souls
The quenchless flames of zeal, and bless'd the sword
He brought on earth to satiate with the blood
Of truth and freedom his malignant soul.
At length his mortal frame was led to death.
I stood beside him: on the torturing cross
No pain assailed his unterrestrial sense;
And yet he groaned. Indignantly I summed
The massacres and misery which his name
Had sanctioned in my country, and I cried, Go! go! in mockery.
A smile of godlike malice reillumined
His fading lineaments.—I go, he cried,
But thou shalt wander o'er the unquiet earth
Eternally.———The dampness of the grave Bathed my imperishable front. I fell,
And long lay tranced upon the charmed soil.
When I awoke hell burned within my brain,
Which staggered on its seat; for all around
The mouldering relics of my kindred lay,
Even as the Almighty's ire arrested them,
And in their various attitudes of death
My murdered children's mute and eyeless skulls Glared ghastily upon me.

But my soul,
From sight and sense of the polluting woe
Of tyranny, had long learned to prefer
Hell's freedom to the servitude of heaven.
Therefore I rose, and dauntlessly began
My lonely and unending pilgrimage,
Resolved to wage unweariable war
With my almighty tyrant, and to hurl
Defiance at his impotence to harm
Beyond the curse I bore. The very hand
That barred my passage to the peaceful grave
Has crushed the earth to misery, and given
Its empire to the chosen of his slaves.
These have I seen, even from the earliest dawn
Of weak, unstable and precarious power;
Then preaching peace, as now they practise war,
So, when they turned but from the massacre
Of unoffending infidels, to quench
Their thirst for ruin in the very blood
That flowed in their own veins, and pitiless zeal Froze every human feeling, as the wife
Sheathed in her husband's heart the sacred steel, Even whilst its hopes were dreaming of her love;
And friends to friends, brothers to brothers stood Opposed in bloodiest battle-field, and war,
Scarce satiable by fate's last death-draught waged,
Drunk from the winepress of the Almighty's wrath;
Whilst the red cross, in mockery of peace,
Pointed to victory! When the fray was done,
No remnant of the exterminated faith
Survived to tell its ruin, but the flesh,
With putrid smoke poisoning the atmosphere,
That rotted on the half-extinguished pile.

Yes! I have seen God's worshippers unsheathe
The sword of his revenge, when grace descended, Confirming all unnatural impulses,
To sanctify their desolating deeds;
And frantic priests waved the ill-omened cross
O'er the unhappy earth; then shone the sun
On showers of gore from the upflashing steel
Of safe assassination, and all crime
Made stingless by the spirits of the Lord,
And blood-red rainbows canopied the land.

Spirit! no year of my eventful being
Has passed unstained by crime and misery, Which flows from God’s own faith. I’ve marked his slaves,
With tongues whose lies are venomous, beguile
The insensate mob, and, whilst one hand was red With murder, feign to stretch the other out
For brotherhood and peace; and that they now
Babble of love and mercy, whilst their deeds
Are marked with all the narrowness and crime
That freedom’s young arm dare not yet chastise, Reason may claim our gratitude, who now
Establishing the imperishable throne
Of truth, and stubborn virtue, maketh vain
The unprevailing malice of my foe,
Whose bootless rage heaps torments for the brave,
Add impotent eternities to pain,
Whilst keenest disappointment racks his breast
To see the smiles of peace around them play,
To frustrate or to sanctify their doom.

Thus have I stood,—through a wild waste of years Struggling with whirlwinds of mad agony,
Yet peaceful, and serene, and self-enshrined,
Mocking my powerless tyrant’s horrible curse
With stubborn and unalterable will,
Even as a giant oak, which heaven’s fierce flame
Had scathed in the wilderness, to stand
A monument of fadeless ruin there;
Yet peacefully and movelessly it braves
The midnight conflict of the wintry storm,
As in the sunlight’s calm it spreads
Its worn and withered arms on high
To meet the quiet of a summer’s noon.
The Fairy waved her wand:
Ahasuerus fled
Fast as the shapes of mingled shade and mist,
That lurk in the glens of a twilight grove.
Flee from the morning beam:
The matter of which dreams are made
Not more endowed with actual life
Than this phantasmal portraiture
Of wandering human thought.

VIII.
The present and the past thou hast beheld:
It was a desolate sight. Now, Spirit, learn
The secrets of the future.—Time!
Unfold the brooding pinion of thy gloom,
Render thou up thy half-devoured babes,
And from the cradles of eternity,
Where millions lie lulled to their portioned sleep
By the deep murmuring stream of passing things,
Tear thou that gloomy shroud.—Spirit, behold Thy glorious destiny!

Joy to the Spirit came.
Through the wide rent in Time's eternal veil,
Hope was seen beaming through the mists of fear:
Earth was no longer hell;
Love, freedom, health, had given Their ripeness to the manhood of its prime,
And all its pulses beat Symphonious to the planetary spheres:
Then dulcet music swelled
Concordant with the life-strings of the soul;
It throbbed in sweet and languid beatings there,
Catching new life from transitory death:
Like the vague sighings of a wind at even,
That wakes the wavelets of the slumbering sea
And dies on the creation of its breath,
And sinks and rises, fails and swells by fits,—

Was the pure stream of feeling
That sprung from these sweet notes,

And o'er the Spirit's human sympathies
With mild and gentle motion calmly flowed.

Joy to the Spirit came,—

Such joy as when a lover sees
The chosen of his soul in happiness,
And witnesses her peace

Whose woe to him were bitterer than death,
Sees her unfaded cheek

Glow mantling in first luxury of health,
Thrills with her lovely eyes,
Which like two stars amid the heaving main Sparkle through liquid bliss.

Then in her triumph spoke the Fairy Queen:
I will not call the ghost of ages gone
To unfold the frightful secrets of its lore;

The present now is past,
And those events that desolate the earth
Have faded from the memory of Time,
Who dares not give reality to that Whose being I annul. To me is given
The wonders of the human world to keep.
Space, matter, time, and mind. Futurity

Exposes now its treasure; let the sight
Renew and strengthen all thy failing hope.
O human Spirit! spur thee to the goal
Where virtue fixes universal peace,
And midst the ebb and flow of human things,
Show somewhat stable, somewhat certain still,
A lighthouse o'er the wild of dreary waves.
The habitable earth is full of bliss;
Those wastes of frozen billows that were hurled
By everlasting snow-storms round the poles,
Where matter dared not vegetate or live,
But ceaseless frost round the vast solitude
Bound its broad zone of stillness, are unloosed;
And fragrant zephyrs there from spicy isles
Ruffle the placid ocean-deep, that rolls
Its broad, bright surges to the sloping sand,
Whose roar is wakened into echoings sweet
To murmur through the heaven-breathing groves
And melodize with man’s bless’d nature there.

Those deserts of immeasurable sand,
Whose age-collected fervours scarce allowed
A bird to live, a blade of grass to spring,
Where the shrill chirp of the green lizard’s love
Broke on the sultry silentness alone,
Now teem with countless rills and shady woods,
Corn-fields and pastures and white cottages;
And where the startled wilderness beheld
A savage conqueror stained in kindred blood,
A tigress sating with the flesh of lambs
The unnatural famine of her toothless cubs,
Whilst shouts and howlings through the desert rang,
Sloping and smooth the daisy-spangled lawn,
Offering sweet incense to the sun-rise, smiles
To see a babe before his mother’s door,
Sharing his morning’s meal
With the green and golden basilisk
That comes to lick his feet.

Those trackless deeps, where many a weary sail
Has seen, above the illimitable plain,
Morning on night, and night on morning rise,
Whilst still no land to greet the wanderer spread
Its shadowy mountains on the sun-bright sea,
Where the loud roarings of the tempest-waves
So long have mingled with the gusty wind
In melancholy loneliness, and swept
The desert of those ocean solitudes,
But vocal to the sea-bird's harrowing shriek,
The bellowing monster, and the rushing storm,
Now to the sweet and many-mingling sounds
Of kindliest human impulses respond.
Those lonely realms bright garden-isles begem,
With lightsome clouds and shining seas between
And fertile valleys resonant with bliss,
Whilst green woods overcanopy the wave,
Which like a toil-worn labourer leaps to shore
To meet the kisses of the flowrets there.

All things are recreated, and the flame
Of consentaneous love inspires all life:
The fertile bosom of the earth gives suck
To myriads, who still grow beneath her care,
Rewarding her with their pure perfectness:
The balmy breathings of the wind inhale
Her virtues, and diffuse them all abroad:
Health floats amid the gentle atmosphere,
Glows in the fruits, and mantles on the stream:
No storms deform the beaming brow of heaven,
Nor scatter in the freshness of its pride
The foliage of the ever verdant trees;
But fruits are ever ripe, flowers ever fair,
And autumn proudly bears her matron grace,
Kindling a flush on the fair cheek of spring,
Whose virgin bloom beneath the ruddy fruit
Reflects its tint and blushes into love.
The lion now forgets to thirst for blood:
There might you see him sporting in the sun
Beside the dreadless kid; his claws are sheathed,
His teeth are harmless, custom's force has made His nature as the nature of a lamb.
Like passion's fruit, the nightshade's tempting bane Poisons no more the pleasure it bestows:
All bitterness is past; the cup of joy
Unmingled mantles to the goblet's brim,
And courts the thirsty lips it fled before.

But chief, ambiguous man, he that can know
More misery, and dream more joy than all;
Whose keen sensations thrill within his breast
To mingle with a loftier instinct there,
Lending their power to pleasure and to pain,
Yet raising, sharpening, and refining each;
Who stands amid the ever-varying world,
The burthen or the glory of the earth;
He chief perceives the change, his being notes
The gradual renovation, and defines
Each movement of its progress on his mind.

Man, where the gloom of the long polar night
Lowers o'er the snow-clad rocks and frozen soil,
Where scarce the hardiest herb that braves the frost
Basks in the moonlight's ineffectual glow,
Shrank with the plants, and darkened with the night;
His chilled and narrow energies, his heart,
Insensible to courage, truth, or love,
His stunted stature and imbecile frame,
Marked him for some abortion of the earth,
Fit compeer of the bears that roam around,
Whose habits and enjoyments were his own:
His life a feverish dream of stagnant woe,
Whose meagre wants but scantily fulfilled
Apprised him ever of the joyless length
Which his short being's wretchedness had reached;

His death a pang which famine, cold and toil
Long on the mind, whilst yet the vital spark Clung to the body stubbornly, had brought:
All was inflicted here that earth's revenge
Could wreak on the infringers of her law;
One curse alone was spared—the name of God.

Nor where the tropics bound the realms of day
With a broad belt of mingling cloud and flame,
Where blue mists through the unmoving atmosphere
Scattered the seeds of pestilence, and fed
Unnatural vegetation, where the land
Teemed with all earthquake, tempest and disease,
Was man a nobler being; slavery
Had crushed him to his country's bloodstained dust;
Or he was bartered for the fame of power,
Which all internal impulses destroying,
Makes human will an article of trade;
Or he was changed with Christians for their gold,
And dragged to distant isles, where to the sound Of the flesh-mangling scourge, he does the work
Of all-polluting luxury and wealth,
Which doubly visits on the tyrants' heads
The long-protracted fulness of their woe;
Or he was led to legal butchery,
To turn to worms beneath that burning sun,
Where kings first leagued against the rights of men,
And priests first traded with the name of God.

Even where the milder zone afforded man
A seeming shelter, yet contagion there,
Blighting his being with unnumbered ills,
Spread like a quenchless fire; nor truth till late Availed to arrest its progress, or create
That peace which first in bloodless victory waved
Her snowy standard o'er this favoured clime:
There man was long the train-bearer of slaves,
The mimic of surrounding misery,
The jackal of ambition's lion-rage,
The bloodhound of religion's hungry zeal.

Here now the human being stands adorning
This loveliest earth with taintless body and mind;
Bless'd from his birth with all bland impulses,
Which gently in his noble bosom wake
All kindly passions and all pure desires.
Him, still from hope to hope the bliss pursuing,
Which from the exhaustless lore of human weal
Draws on the virtuous mind, the thoughts that rise
In time-destroying infiniteness, gift
With self-enshrined eternity, that mocks
The unprevailing hoariness of age;
And man, once fleeting o'er the transient scene
Swift as an unremembered vision, stands
Immortal upon earth: no longer now
He slays the lamb that looks him in the face,
And horribly devours his mangled flesh,
Which still avenging nature's broken law
Kindled all putrid humours in his frame,
All evil passions, and all vain belief,
Hatred, despair, and loathing in his mind,
The germs of misery, death, disease, and crime.
No longer now the wingèd habitants,
That in the woods their sweet lives sing away,
Flee from the form of man; but gather round,
And prune their sunny feathers on the hands
Which little children stretch in friendly sport
Towards these dreadless partners of their play.
All things are void of terror: man has lost
His terrible prerogative, and stands
An equal amidst equals: happiness
And science dawn though late upon the earth;
Peace cheers the mind, health renovates the frame;
Disease and pleasure cease to mingle here,
Reason and passion cease to combat there;
Whilst each unfettered o'er the earth extend Their all-subduing energies, and wield
The sceptre of a vast dominion there;
Whilst every shape and mode of matter lends
Its force to the omnipotence of mind,
Which from its dark mine drags the gem of truth
To decorate its paradise of peace.

IX.

O happy Earth! reality of Heaven!
To which those restless souls that ceaselessly
Throng through the human universe aspire;
Thou consummation of all mortal hope!
Thou glorious prize of blindly-working will!
Whose rays, diffused throughout all space and time,

1 Although prune is the more usual orthography when the word applies to a bird's action, the choice of prune was probably deliberate. At all events Shelley left the word when revising the passage for the second part of The Daemon of the World: see line 164.
Verge to one point and blend for ever there:
Of purest spirits thou pure dwelling-place!
Where care and sorrow, impotence and crime,
Languor, disease, and ignorance dare not come:
O happy Earth, reality of Heaven!

Genius has seen thee in thy passionate dreams;
And dim forebodings of thy loveliness,
Haunting the human heart, have there entwined
Those rooted hopes of some sweet place of bliss
Where friends and lovers meet to part no more.
Thou art the end of all desire and will,
The product of all action; and the souls
That by the paths of an aspiring change
Have reached thy haven of perpetual peace,
There rest from the eternity of toil
That framed the fabric of thy perfectness.

Even Time, the conqueror, fled thee in his fear;
That hoary giant, who, in lonely pride,
So long had ruled the world, that nations fell Beneath his silent footstep. Pyramids,
That for millenniums had withstood the tide
Of human things, his storm-breath drove in sand Across that desert where their stones survived
The name of him whose pride had heaped them there.

Yon monarch, in his solitary pomp,
Was but the mushroom of a summer day,
That his light-winged footstep pressed to dust:
Time was the king of earth: all things gave way Before him, but the fixed and virtuous will,
The sacred sympathies of soul and sense,
That mocked his fury and prepared his fall.

Yet slow and gradual dawned the morn of love;
Long lay the clouds of darkness o'er the scene,
Till from its native heaven they rolled away:
First, Crime triumphant o'er all hope careered Unblushing, undisguising, bold and strong;
Whilst Falsehood, tricked in Virtue's attributes,
Long sanctified all deeds of vice and woe,
Till done by her own venomous sting to death,
She left the moral world without a law,
No longer fettering passion's fearless wing,
Nor searing reason with the brand of God.
Then steadily the happy ferment worked;
Reason was free; and wild though passion went Through tangled glens and wood-embosomed meads,
Gathering a garland of the strangest flowers,
Yet like the bee returning to her queen,
She bound the sweetest on her sister's brow,
Who meek and sober kissed the sportive child,
No longer trembling at the broken rod.

Mild was the slow necessity of death:
The tranquil spirit failed beneath its grasp,
Without a groan, almost without a fear,
Calm as a voyager to some distant land,
And full of wonder, full of hope as he.
The deadly germs of languor and disease
Died in the human frame, and purity
Bless'd with all gifts her earthly worshippers.
How vigorous then the athletic form of age!
How clear its open and unwrinkled brow!
Where neither avarice, cunning, pride, or care,
Had stamped the seal of grey deformity
On all the mingling lineaments of time.
How lovely the intrepid front of youth!
Which meek-eyed courage decked with freshest grace;
Courage of soul that dreaded not a name,
And elevated will, that journeyed on Through life's phantasmal scene in fearlessness,
With virtue, love, and pleasure, hand in hand.

Then, that sweet bondage which is freedom's self,
And rivets with sensation's softest tie
The kindred sympathies of human souls,
Needed no fetters of tyrannic law:
Those delicate and timid impulses
In nature's primal modesty arose,
And with undoubted confidence disclosed
The growing longings of its dawning love,
Unchecked by dull and selfish chastity,
That virtue of the cheaply virtuous,
Who pride themselves in senselessness and frost.
No longer prostitution's venomed bane
Poisoned the springs of happiness and life;
Woman and man, in confidence and love,
Equal and free and pure together trod
The mountain-paths of virtue, which no more
Were stained with blood from many a pilgrim's feet.

Then, where, through distant ages, long in pride
The palace of the monarch-slave had mocked
Famine's faint groan and penury's silent tear,
A heap of crumbling ruins stood, and threw
Year after year their stones upon the field,
Wakening a lonely echo; and the leaves
Of the old thorn, that on the topmost tower
Usurped the royal ensign's grandeur, shook
In the stern storm that swayed the topmost tower
And whispered strange tales in the whirlwind's ear.

Low through the lone cathedral's roofless aisles
The melancholy winds a death-dirge sung:
It were a sight of awfulness to see
The works of faith and slavery, so vast,
So sumptuous, yet so perishing withal!
Even as the corpse that rests beneath its wall.
A thousand mourners deck the pomp of death
To-day, the breathing marble glows above
To decorate its memory, and tongues
Are busy of its life: to-morrow, worms
In silence and in darkness seize their prey.

Within the massy prison's mouldering courts,
Fearless and free the ruddy children played,
Weaving gay chaplets for their innocent brows
With the green ivy and the red wall-flower,
That mock the dungeon's unavailing gloom;
The ponderous chains, and gratings of strong iron,
There rusted amid heaps of broken stone
That mingled slowly with their native earth:
There the broad beam of day, which feebly once
Lighted the cheek of lean captivity
With a pale and sickly glare, then freely shone
On the pure smiles of infant playfulness:
No more the shuddering voice of hoarse despair
Pealed through the echoing vaults, but soothing notes
Of ivy-fingered winds and gladsome birds
And merriment were resonant around.
These ruins soon left not a wreck behind: Their elements, wide scattered o'er the globe, To happier shapes were moulded, and became Ministrant to all blissful impulses: Thus human things were perfected, and earth, Even as a child beneath its mother's love, Was strengthened in all excellence, and grew Fairer and nobler with each passing year.

Now Time his dusky pennons o'er the scene Closes in steadfast darkness, and the past Fades from our charm'd sight. My task is done: Thy lore is learned. Earth's wonders are thine own,

With all the fear and all the hope they bring. My spells are past: the present now recurs. Ah me! a pathless wilderness remains Yet unsubdued by man's reclaiming hand. Yet, human Spirit, bravely hold thy course, Let virtue teach thee firmly to pursue The gradual paths of an aspiring change: For birth and life and death, and that strange state Before the naked soul has found its home, All tend to perfect happiness, and urge The restless wheels of being on their way, Whose flashing spokes, instinct with infinite life, Bicker and burn to gain their destined goal: For birth but wakes the spirit to the sense Of outward shows, whose unexperienced shape New modes of passion to its frame may lend; Life is its state of action, and the store Of all events is aggregated there That variegate the eternal universe; Death is a gate of dreariness and gloom, That leads to azure isles and beaming skies
And happy regions of eternal hope.
Therefore, O Spirit! fearlessly bear on:
Though storms may break the primrose on its stalk,
Though frosts may blight the freshness of its bloom,
Yet spring's awakening breath will woo the earth,
To feed with kindliest dews its favourite flower,
That blooms in mossy banks and darksome glens,
Lighting the green wood with its sunny smile.

Fear not then, Spirit, death's disrobing hand,
So welcome when the tyrant is awake,
So welcome when the bigot's hell-torch burns;
'Tis but the voyage of a darksome hour,
The transient gulph-dream of a startling sleep.
Death is no foe to virtue: earth has seen
Love's brightest roses on the scaffold bloom,
Mingling with freedom's fadeless laurels there,
And presaging the truth of visioned bliss.
Are there not hopes within thee, which this scene
Of linked and gradual being has confirmed?
Whose stingings bade thy heart look further still,
When to the moonlight walk by Henry led,
Sweetly and sadly thou didst talk of death?
And wilt thou rudely tear them from thy breast,
Listening supinely to a bigot's creed,
Or tamely crouching to the tyrant's rod,
Whose iron thongs are red with human gore?
Never: but bravely bearing on, thy will
Is destined an eternal war to wage
With tyranny and falsehood, and uproot
The germs of misery from the human heart.
Thine is the hand whose piety would soothe
The thorny pillow of unhappy crime,
Whose impotence an easy pardon gains,
Watching its wanderings as a friend's disease:
Thine is the brow whose mildness would defy
Its fiercest rage, and brave its sternest will,
When fenced by power and master of the world.
Thou art sincere and good; of resolute mind,
Free from heart-withering custom's cold control,
Of passion lofty, pure and unsubdued.
Earth's pride and meanness could not vanquish thee,
And therefore art thou worthy of the boon
Which thou hast now received: virtue shall keep Thy footsteps in the path that thou hast trod,
And many days of beaming hope shall bless
Thy spotless life of sweet and sacred love.
Go, happy one, and give that bosom joy
Whose sleepless spirit waits to catch
Light, life and rapture from thy smile.

The Fairy waves her wand of charm.
Speechless with bliss the Spirit mounts the car,
That rolled beside the battlement,
Bending her beamy eyes in thankfulness.
Again the enchanted steeds were yoked,
Again the burning wheels inflame
The steep descent of heaven's untrodden way.
Fast and far the chariot flew:
The vast and fiery globes that rolled Around the Fairy's palace-gate
Lessened by slow degrees and soon appeared
Such tiny twinklers as the planet orbs
That there attendant on the solar power
With borrowed light pursued their narrower way.
Earth floated then below:
The chariot paused a moment there;
The Spirit then descended:
The restless coursers pawed the ungenial soil,
Snuffed the gross air, and then, their errand done,
Unfurled their pinions to the winds of heaven.
The Body and the Soul united then,
A gentle start convulsed Ianthe's frame:
Her veiny eyelids quietly unclosed;
Moveless awhile the dark blue orbs remained:
She looked around in wonder and beheld
Henry, who kneeled in silence by her couch,
Watching her sleep with looks of speechless love,
And the bright beaming stars
That through the casement shone.
The sun's unclouded orb
Rolled through the black concave.

Beyond our atmosphere the sun would appear a rayless orb of fire in the midst of a black concave. The equal diffusion of light on earth is owing to the refraction of the rays by the atmosphere, and their reflexion from other bodies. Light consists either of vibrations propagated through a subtle medium, or of numerous minute particles repelled in all directions from the luminous body. Its velocity greatly exceeds that of any substance with which we are acquainted: observations on the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites have demonstrated that light takes up no more than 8' 7" in passing from the sun to the earth, a distance of 95,000,000 miles. Some idea may be gained of the immense distance of the fixed stars, when it is computed that many years would elapse before light could reach this earth from the nearest of them; yet in one year light travels 5,422,400,000,000 miles, which is a distance 5,707,600 times greater than that of the sun from the earth.

1 The attribution of these notes to Byron wrung from him, together with his denial, a public tribute to Shelley's genius. In the appendix to The Two Foscari, as first published in 1821 with Sardanapalus and Cain, Byron refers (page 326) to Queen Mab as "a poem of great power and imagination," adding —"in common with all who are not blinded by baselessness and bigotry, I highly admire the poetry of that and his other publications."—Ed.
I.—Page 12.

Whilst round the chariot's way
Innumerable systems rolled.

The plurality of worlds,—the indefinite immensity of the universe is a most awful subject of contemplation. He who rightly feels its mystery and grandeur is in no danger of seduction from the falsehoods of religious systems, or of deifying the principle of the universe. It is impossible to believe that the Spirit that pervades this infinite machine begat a son upon the body of a Jewish woman, or is angered at the consequences of that necessity which is a synonym of itself. All that miserable tale of the Devil and Eve, and an Intercessor, with the childish mummeries of the God of the Jews, is irreconcilable with the knowledge of the stars. The works of his fingers have borne witness against him.

The nearest of the fixed stars is inconceivably distant from the earth, and they are probably proportionally distant from each other. By a calculation of the velocity of light, Sirius is supposed to be at least 54,224,000,000,000 miles from the earth.¹ That which appears only like a thin and silvery cloud streaking the heaven, is in effect composed of innumerable clusters of suns, each shining with its own light, and illuminating numbers of planets that revolve around them. Millions and millions of suns are ranged around us, all attended by innumerable worlds, yet calm, regular, and harmonious, all keeping the paths of immutable necessity.

IV.—Page 34.

These are the hired bravos who defend
The tyrant's throne.

To employ murder as a means of justice, is an idea which a man of an enlightened mind will not dwell upon with pleasure. To march forth in rank and file, and all the pomp of streamers and trumpets, for the purpose of shooting at our fellow-men as a mark; to inflict upon them all the variety of wound and anguish; to leave them weltering in their blood; to wander over the field of desolation, and count the number of the dying and the dead,—are employments which in thesis we may maintain to be necessary, but which no good man will contemplate with gratulation and delight. A battle we suppose is won:—thus truth is established, thus the cause of justice is confirmed! It surely requires no common sagacity to discern the connexion between this immense heap of calamities and the assertion of truth or the maintenance of justice.

¹ See Nicholson's Encyclopedia, art. Light.

Kings, and ministers of state, the real authors of the calamity, sit unmolested in their cabinet, while those against whom the fury of the storm is directed are, for the most part, persons who have been trepanned into the service, or who are dragged unwillingly from their peaceful homes into the field of battle. A soldier is a man whose business it is to kill those who never offended him, and who are the innocent martyrs of other men's iniquities. Whatever may become of the abstract question of the justifiableness of war, it seems impossible that the soldier should not be a depraved and unnatural being.

To these more serious and momentous considerations it may be proper to add a recollection of the ridiculousness of the military character. Its first constituent is obedience: a soldier is, of all descriptions of men, the most completely a machine; yet his profession inevitably teaches him something of dogmatism, swaggering, and self-consequence: he is like the puppet of a showman, who, at the very time he is made to strut and swell and display the most farcical airs, we perfectly know cannot assume the most insignificant gesture, advance either to the right or the left, but as he is moved by his exhibitor.

—Godwin's Enquirer, Essay v.¹

I will here subjoin a little poem, so strongly expressive of my abhorrence of despotism and falsehood, that I fear lest it never again may be depicted so ¹ This not quite accurate transcript is from the Essay Of Trades and Professions, the fifth Essay in Part II. of The Enquirer.—Ed.

vividly. This opportunity is perhaps the only one that ever will occur of rescuing it from oblivion.

FALSEHOOD AND VICE:

A DIALOGUE.

WHILST monarchs laughed upon their thrones
To hear a famished nation's groans,
And hugged the wealth wrung from the woe
That makes its eyes and veins o'erflow,— Those thrones, high built upon the heaps
Of bones where frenzied famine sleeps,
Where slavery yields her scourge of iron,
Red with mankind's unheeded gore,
And war's mad fiends the scene environ,
Mingling with shrieks a drunken roar,
There Vice and Falsehood took their stand,
High raised above the unhappy land.

FALSEHOOD.

Brother! arise from the dainty fare,
Which thousands have toiled and bled to bestow;
A finer feast for thy hungry ear
Is the news that I bring of human woe.

VICE.

And, secret one, what hast thou done,
To compare, in thy tumid pride, with me?
I, whose career, through the blasted year,
Has been tracked by despair and agony.

FALSEHOOD.

What have I done!—I have torn the robe
From baby truth's unsheltered form,
And round the desolated globe
Borne safely the bewildering charm:
My tyrant-slaves to a dungeon-floor
Have bound the fearless innocent,
And streams of fertilizing gore
Flow from her bosom's hideous rent,
Which this unfailing dagger gave....
I dread that blood!—no more—this day
Is ours, though her eternal ray Must shine upon our grave.
Yet know, proud Vice, had I not given
To thee the robe I stole from heaven,
Thy shape of ugliness and fear
Had never gained admission here.

VICE.
And know that, had I disdained to toil,
But sate in my loathsome cave the while,
And ne'er to these hateful sons of heaven,
GOLD, MONARCHY, and MURDER, given; 40
Hadst thou with all thine art essayed
One of thy games then to have played,
With all thine overweening boast,
Falsehood! I tell thee thou hadst lost!—
Yet wherefore this dispute?—we tend,
Fraternal, to one common end;
In this cold grave beneath my feet,
Will our hopes, our fears, and our labours, meet.

FALSEHOOD.
I brought my daughter, RELIGION, on earth:
She smothered Reason's babes in their birth, 50
But dreaded their mother's eye severe,—
So the crocodile slunk off shily in fear,
And loosed her bloodhounds from the den. . .
They started from dreams of slaughtered men,
And, by the light of her poison eye,
Did her work o'er the wide earth frightfully:
The dreadful stench of her torches' flare,
Fed with human fat, polluted the air:
The curses, the shrieks, the ceaseless cries
Of the many-mingling miseries, 60
As on she trod, ascended high
And trumpeted my victory!—
Brother, tell what thou hast done.

VICE.
I have extinguished the noon-day sun,
In the carnage-smoke of battles won:
Famine, murder, hell and power
Were glutted in that glorious hour
Which searchless fate had stamped for me
With the seal of her security. . . . . 70
For the bloated wretch on yonder throne
Commanded the bloody fray to rise.
Like me he joyed at the stilled moan
I. G
Wrung from a nation's miseries;
While the snakes, whose slime even him defiled,
In ecstasies of malice smiled:
They thought 'twas theirs,—but mine the deed!
Their is the toil, but mine the meed—
Ten thousand victims madly bleed.
They dream that tyrants goad them there
With poisonous war to taint the air:
These tyrants, on their beds of thorn,
Swell with the thoughts of murderous fame,
And with their gains to lift my name
Restless they plan from night to morn:
I—I do all; without my aid
Thy daughter, that relentless maid,
Could never o'er a death-bed urge
The fury of her venomed scourge.

FALSEHOOD.
Brother, well:—the world is ours;
And whether thou or I have won,
The pestilence expectant pours
On all beneath yon blasted sun.
Our joys, our toils, our honours meet
In the milk-white and wormy winding-sheet:
A short-lived hope, unceasing care,
Some heartless scraps of godly prayer,
A moody curse, and a frenzied sleep,
Ere gapes the grave's unclosing deep,
A tyrant's dream, a coward's start,
The ice that clings to a priestly heart,
A judge's frown, a courtier's smile,
Make the great whole for which we toil;
And, brother, whether thou or I Have done the work of misery,
It little boots: thy toil and pain,
Without my aid, were more than vain;
And but for thee I ne'er had sate
The guardian of heaven's palace gate.

V.—Page 37.
Thus do the generations of the earth
Go to the grave and issue from the womb.
One generation passeth away and another generation cometh, but the earth abideth for ever. The sun also ariseth and the sun goeth down, and hasteth to his place where he arose. The wind goeth toward the south and turneth about unto the north, it whirlmeth about continually, and the wind returneth again according to his circuits. All the rivers run into the sea, yet the sea is not full; unto the place whence the rivers come, thither shall they return again.

Ecclesiastes, chap. i.

V.—Page 37.

Even as the leaves
Which the keen frost-wind of the waning year
Has scattered on the forest soil.

Ωὴ περ φύλλων γενεὴ, τοιὸδε καὶ αὐτῶν.
Φύλλα τὰ μὲν τ' ἁνεμος χαμάδις χέει, ἄλλα δὲ θ' ὅλη Τηλεβοῦσα φέει, ἔρας δ' ἐπιγίγνεται ώρη'
"Ως ἀνέρων γενεὴ, ἣ μὲν φύει, ἣ' ἀπολύει.

Iliad. Z. l. 146.

V.—Page 38.

The mob of peasants, nobles, priests, and kings.

Suave mari magnos turbantibus aequora ventis
E terrâ magnum alterius spectare laborem;
Non quia vexari quemquam 'st jucunda voluptas,
Sed quibus ipse malis careas quia cernere suave 'st.

Suave etiam bellis certamina magna tueri,
Per campos instructa, tua sine parte perici;
Sed nil duleius est bene quam munita tenere
Edita doctrina sapientum templâ serena;

Despicere unde quas alios, passim que videre
Errare atque viam palanteis quaerere vitae;

Certare ingenio; contendere nobilitate;
Nocteis atque dies niti præstante labore
Ad summam emergere opes, rerum que potiri.
O miseris hominum menteis! O pectora caeca!

Luc. lib. ii.
And statesmen boast
Of wealth!

There is no real wealth but the labour of man. Were the mountains of gold and the valleys of silver, the world would not be one grain of corn the richer; no one comfort would be added to the human race. In consequence of our consideration for the precious metals, one man is enabled to heap to himself luxuries at the expense of the necessaries of his neighbour; a system admirably fitted to produce all the varieties of disease and crime, which never fail to characterize the two extremes of opulence and penury. A speculator takes pride to himself as the promoter of his country's prosperity, who employs a number of hands in the manufacture of articles avowedly destitute of use, or subservient only to the unhallowed cravings of luxury and ostentation. The nobleman, who employs the peasants of his neighbourhood in building his palaces, until "jam pauca aratro jugera, regie moles relinquunt," flatters himself that he has gained the title of a patriot by yielding to the impulses of vanity. The show and pomp of courts adduce the same apology for its continuance; and many a fête has been given, many a woman has eclipsed her beauty by her dress, to benefit the labouring poor and to encourage trade. Who does not see that this is a remedy which aggravates, whilst it palliates the countless diseases of society? The poor are set to labour,—for what? Not the food for which they famish: not the blankets for want of which their babes are frozen by the cold of their miserable hovels: not those comforts of civilization without which civilized man is far more miserable than the meanest savage; oppressed as he is by all its insidions evils, within the daily and taunting prospect of its innumerable benefits assiduously exhibited before him:—no; for the pride of power, for the miserable isolation of pride, for the false pleasures of the hundredth part of society. No greater evidence is afforded of the wide-extended and radical mistakes of civilized man than this fact: those arts which are essential to his very being are held in the greatest contempt; en-ployments are lucrative in an inverse ratio to their usefulness: the jeweller, the toyman, the actor gains fame and wealth by the exercise of his useless and ridiculous art; whilst the cultivator of the earth, he without whom society must cease to subsist, struggles through contempt and penury, and perishes by that famine which, but for his unceasing exertions, would annihilate the rest of mankind.

I will not insult common sense by insisting on the doctrine of the natural equality of man. The question is not concerning its desirableness, but its practicability: so far as it is practicable, it is desirable. That state of human society which approaches nearer to an equal partition of its benefits and evils should, ceteris paribus, be preferred: but so long as we conceive that a wanton expenditure of human labour, not for the necessities, not even for the luxuries of the mass of society, but for the egotism and ostentation of a few of its members, is defensible on the ground of public justice, so long we neglect to approximate to the redemption of the human race.

Labour is required for physical, and leisure for moral improvement: from the former of these advantages the rich, and from the latter the poor, by the inevitable conditions of their respective situations, are precluded. A state which should combine the advantages of both, would be subjected to the evils of neither. He that is deficient in firm health, or vigorous intellect, is but half a man; hence it follows, that, to subject the labouring classes to unnecessary labour, is wantonly depriving them of any opportunities of intellectual improvement; and that the rich are heaping up for their own mischief the disease, lassitude and ennui by which their existence is rendered an intolerable burthen.

English reformers exclaim against sinecures,—but the true pension list is the rent-roll of the landed proprietors: wealth is a power usurped by the few, to compel the many to labour for their benefit. The laws which support this system derive their force from the ignorance and credulity of its victims: they are the result of a conspiracy of the few against the many, who are themselves obliged to purchase this pre-eminence by the loss of all real comfort.

---

1 See Rousseau, De l'Inégalité parmi les Hommes, note 7.

The commodities that substantially contribute to the subsistence of the human species form a very short catalogue: they demand from us but a slender portion of industry. If these only were produced, and sufficiently produced, the species of man would be continued. If the labour necessarily required to produce them were equitably divided among the poor, and, still more, if it were equitably divided among all, each man’s share of labour would be light, and his portion of leisure would be ample. There was a time when this leisure would have been of small comparative value: it is to be hoped that the time will come, when it will be applied to the most important purposes. Those hours which are not required for the production of the necessaries of life may be devoted to the cultivation of the understanding, the enlarging our stock of knowledge, the refining our taste, and thus opening to us new and more exquisite sources of enjoyment.

It was perhaps necessary that a period of monopoly and oppression should subsist, before a period of cultivated equality could subsist. Savages perhaps would never have been excited to the discovery of truth and the invention of art, but by the narrow motives which such a period affords. But surely, after the savage state has ceased, and men have set out in the glorious career of discovery and invention, monopoly and oppression cannot be necessary to prevent them from returning to a state of barbarism.—GODWIN’S Enquirer, Essay II. See also Pol. Jus., book viii. chap. ii.\(^1\)

It is a calculation of this admirable author, that all the conveniences of civilized life might be produced, if society would divide the labour equally among its members, by each individual being employed in labour two hours during the day.

---

\(^1\) This extract, only slightly inaccurate, is from the Essay Of Avarice and Profusion in Part II. of The Enquirer. The reference to Godwin’s Political Justice is wrongly given in Shelley’s private issue of Queen Mab as to “chap. 11.”—Ed.
V.—Page 40.

or religion

Drives his wife raving mad.

I am acquainted with a lady of considerable accomplishments, and the mother of a numerous family, whom the Christian religion has goaded to incurable insanity. A parallel case is, I believe, within the experience of every physician.

Nam jam sæpe homines patriam, carosque parentes Prodiderunt, vitare Acherusia tempt atpetentes.

Lucretius.

V.—Page 42.

Even love is sold.

Not even the intercourse of the sexes is exempt from the despotism of positive institution. Law pretends even to govern the indisciplinable wanderings of passion, to put fetters on the clearest deductions of reason, and, by appeals to the will, to subdue the involuntary affections of our nature. Love is inevitably consequent upon the perception of loveliness. Love withers under constraint: its very essence is liberty: it is compatible neither with obedience, jealousy, nor fear: it is there most pure, perfect, and unlimited, where its votaries live in confidence, equality and unreserve.

How long then ought the sexual connexion to last? what law ought to specify the extent of the grievances which should limit its duration? A husband and wife ought to continue so long united as they love each other: any law which should bind them to cohabitation for one moment after the decay of their affection, would be a most intolerable tyranny, and the most unworthy of toleration. How odious an usurpation of the right of private judgment should that law be considered, which should make the ties of friendship indissoluble, in spite of the caprices, the inconstancy, the fallibility, and capacity for improvement of the human mind. And by so much would the fetters of love be heavier and more unendurable than those of friendship, as love is more vehement and capricious, more dependent on those delicate peculiarities of imagination, and less capable of reduction to the ostensible merits of the object.

The state of society in which we exist is a mixture of feudal savageness and imperfect civilization. The narrow and unenlightened morality of the Christian religion is an aggravation of these evils. It is not even until lately that mankind have admitted that happiness is the sole end of the science of ethics, as of all other sciences; and that the fanatical idea of mortifying the flesh for the love of God has been discarded. I have heard, indeed, an ignorant collegian adduce, in favour of Christianity, its hostility to every worldly feeling! But if happiness be the object of morality, of all human unions and disunions; if the worthiness of every action is to be estimated by the quantity of pleasurable sensation it is calculated to produce, then the connexion of the sexes is so long sacred as it contributes to the comfort of the parties, and is naturally dissolved when its evils are greater than its benefits. There is nothing immoral in this separation. Constancy has nothing virtuous in itself, independently of the pleasure it confers, and partakes of the temporizing spirit of vice in proportion as it endures tamely moral defects of magnitude in the object of its indiscreet choice. Love is free: to promise for ever to love the same woman, is not less absurd than to promise to believe the same creed: such a vow, in both cases, excludes us from all enquiry. The language of the votarist is this: The woman I now love may be infinitely inferior to many others; the creed I now profess

1 The first Christian emperor made a law by which seduction was punished with death; if the female pleaded her own consent, she also was punished with death; if the parents endeavoured to screen the criminals, they were banished and their estates were confiscated; the slaves who might be accessory were burned alive, or forced to swallow melted lead. The very offspring of an illegal love were involved in the consequences of the sentence.—Gibbon's Decline and Fall, &c., vol. ii. page 210. See also, for the hatred of the primitive Christians to love and even marriage, page 269.
may be a mass of errors and absurdities; but I exclude myself from all future information as to the amiability of the one and the truth of the other, resolving blindly, and in spite of conviction, to adhere to them. Is this the language of delicacy and reason? Is the love of such a frigid heart of more worth than its belief?

The present system of constraint does no more, in the majority of instances, than make hypocrites or open enemies. Persons of delicacy and virtue, unhappily united to one whom they find it impossible to love, spend the loveliest season of their life in unproductive efforts to appear otherwise than they are, for the sake of the feelings of their partner or the welfare of their mutual offspring: those of less generosity and refinement openly avow their disappointment, and linger out the remnant of that union, which only death can dissolve, in a state of incurable bickering and hostility. The early education of their children takes its colour from the squabbles of the parents; they are nursed in a systematic school of ill humour, violence, and falsehood. Had they been suffered to part at the moment when indifference rendered their union irksome, they would have been spared many years of misery: they would have connected themselves more suitably, and would have found that happiness in the society of more congenial partners which is for ever denied them by the despotism of marriage. They would have been separately useful and happy members of society, who, whilst united, were miserable and rendered misanthropical by misery. The conviction that wedlock is indissoluble holds out the strongest of all temptations to the perverse: they indulge without restraint in acrimony, and all the little tyrannies of domestic life, when they know that their victim is without appeal. If this connexion were put on a rational basis, each would be assured that habitual ill temper would terminate in separation, and would check this vicious and dangerous propensity.

Prostitution is the legitimate offspring of marriage and its accompanying errors. Women, for no other crime than having followed the dictates of a natural appetite, are driven with fury from the comforts and sympathies of society. It is less venial than murder; and the punishment which is inflicted on her who destroys her child to escape reproach, is lighter than the life of agony and disease to which the prostitute is irrecoverably doomed. Has a woman obeyed the impulse of unerring nature;—society declares war against her, pitiless and eternal war: she must be the tame slave, she must make no reprisals; theirs is the right of persecution, hers the duty of endurance. She lives a life of infamy: the loud and bitter laugh of scorn scares her from all return. She dies of long and lingering disease: yet she is in fault, she is the criminal, she the froward and untameable child,—and society, forsooth, the pure and virtuous matron, who casts her as an abortion from her undefiled bosom!
Society avenges herself on the criminals of her own creation; she is employed in anathematizing the vice to-day, which yesterday she was the most zealous to teach. Thus is formed one tenth of the population of London: meanwhile the evil is twofold. Young men, excluded by the fanatical idea of chastity from the society of modest and accomplished women, associate with these vicious and miserable beings, destroying thereby all those exquisite and delicate sensibilities whose existence cold-hearted worldlings have denied; annihilating all genuine passion, and debasing that to a selfish feeling which is the excess of generosity and devotedness. Their body and mind alike crumble into a hideous wreck of humanity; idiocy and disease become perpetuated in their miserable offspring, and distant generations suffer for the bigoted morality of their forefathers. Chastity is a monkish and evangelical superstition, a greater foe to natural temperance even than unintellectual sensuality; it strikes at the root of all domestic happiness, and consigns more than half of the human race to misery, that some few may monopolize according to law. A system could not well have been devised more studiously hostile to human happiness than marriage.

I conceive that, from the abolition of marriage, the fit and natural arrangement of sexual connexion would result. I by no means assert that the intercourse would be promiscuous: on the contrary; it appears, from the relation of parent to child, that this union is generally of long duration, and marked above all others with generosity and self-devotion. But this is a subject which it is perhaps premature to discuss.
That which will result from the abolition of marriage will be natural and right, because choice and change will be exempted from restraint. In fact religion and morality as they now stand compose a practical code of misery and servitude: the genius of human happiness must tear every leaf from the accursed book of God, ere man can read the inscription on his heart. How would morality, dressed up in stiff stays and finery, start from her own disgusting image, should she look in the mirror of nature!

VI.—Page 46.

To the red and baleful sun
That faintly twinkles there.

The north polar star, to which the axis of the earth, in its present state of obliquity, points. It is exceedingly probable, from many considerations, that this obliquity will gradually diminish, until the equator coincides with the ecliptic: the nights and days will then become equal on the earth throughout the year, and probably the seasons also. There is no great extravagance in presuming that the progress of the perpendicularity of the poles may be as rapid as the progress of intellect; or that there should be a perfect identity between the moral and physical improvement of the human species. It is certain that wisdom is not compatible with disease, and that, in the present state of the climates of the earth, health, in the true and comprehensive sense of the word, is out of the reach of civilized man. Astronomy teaches us that the earth is now in its progress, and that the poles are every year becoming more and more perpendicular to the ecliptic. The strong evidence afforded by the history of mythology, and geological researches, that some event of this nature has taken place already, affords a strong presumption that this progress is not merely an oscillation, as has been surmised by some late astronomers.

1 Bones of animals peculiar to the torrid zone have been found in the north of Siberia, and on the banks of the river Ohio. Plants have been found in the fossil state in the interior of Germany; which demand the present climate of Hindostan for their production. The researches of M. Bailly establish the existence of a people who inhabited a tract in Tartary 49° north latitude, of greater antiquity than either the Indians, the Chinese, or the Chaldeans, from whom these nations derived their sciences and theology. We find, from the testimony of ancient writers, that Britain, Germany and France were much colder than at present, and that their great rivers were annually frozen over. Astronomy teaches us also, that since this period the obliquity of the earth's position has been considerably diminished.

1 Laplace, Système du Monde.

VI.—Page 50.

No atom of this turbulence fulfils
A vague and unnecessitated task,
Or acts but as it must and ought to act.

Deux exemples serviront à nous rendre plus sensible le principe qui vient d'être posé; nous emprunterons l'une du physique et l'autre du moral. Dans un tourbillon de poussière qu'éleve un vent impétueux, quelque confus qu'il paraisse à nos yeux; dans la plus adhrente tempête excitée par des vents opposés qui soulèvent les flots, il n'y a pas une seule molécule de poussière ou d'eau qui soit placé au hasard, qui n'ait sa cause suffisante pour occuper le lieu où elle se trouve, et qui n'agisse rigoureusement de la manière dont elle doit agir. Un géomètre qui connaîtrait exactement les différentes forces qui agissent dans ces deux cas, et les propriétés des molécules qui sont nues, démontrerait que d'après des causes données, chaque molécule agit précisément comme elle doit agir, et ne peut agir autrement qu'elle ne fait.

Dans les convulsions terribles qui agitent quelquefois les sociétés politiques, et qui produisent souvent le renversement d'un empire, il n'y a pas une seule action, une seule parole, une seule pensée, une seule volonté, une seule passion dans les agens qui con-

VI.—Page 51.

Necessity! thou mother of the world!

He who asserts the doctrine of Necessity means that, contemplating the events which compose the moral and material universe, he beholds only an immense and uninterrupted chain of causes and effects, no one of which could occupy any other place than it does occupy, or acts in any other place than it does act. The idea of necessity is obtained by our experience of the connexion between objects, the uniformity of the operations of nature, the constant conjunction of similar events, and the consequent inference of one from the other. Mankind are therefore agreed in the admission of necessity, if they admit that these two circumstances take place in voluntary action. Motive is, to voluntary action in the human mind, what cause is to effect in the material universe. The word liberty, as applied to mind, is analogous to the word chance as applied to matter: they spring from an ignorance of the certainty of the conjunction of antecedents and consequents.

Every human being is irresistibly impelled to act precisely as he does act: in the eternity which preceded his birth a chain of causes was generated, which, operating under the name of motives, make it impossible that any thought of his mind, or any action of his life, should be otherwise than it is. Were the doctrine of Necessity false, the human mind would no longer be a legitimate object of science; from like causes it would be in vain that we should expect like effects; the strongest motive would no longer be paramount over the conduct; all knowledge would be vague and undeterminate; we could not predict with any certainty that we might not meet as an enemy to-morrow him with whom we have parted in friendship to-night; the most probable inducements and the clearest reasonings would lose the invariable influence they possess. The contrary of this is demonstrably the fact. Similar circumstances produce the same unvariable effects. The precise character and motives of any man on any occasion being given, the moral philosopher could predict his actions with as much certainty as the natural philosopher could predict the effects of the mixture of any particular chemical substances. Why is the aged husbandman more experienced than the young beginner? Because there is a uniform, undeniable necessity in the operations of the material universe. Why is the old statesman more skilful than the raw politician? Because, relying on the necessary conjunction of motive and action, he proceeds to produce moral effects, by the application of those moral causes which experience has shown to be effectual. Some actions may be found to which we can attach no motives; but these are the effects of causes with which we are unacquainted. Hence the relation which motive bears to voluntary action is that of cause to effect; nor, placed in this point of view, is it or ever has it been the subject of popular or philosophical dispute. None but the few fanatics who are engaged in the herculean task of reconciling the justice of their God with the misery of man will longer outrage common sense by the supposition of an event without a cause, a voluntary action without a motive. History, politics, morals, criticism, all grounds of reasonings, all principles of science, alike assume the truth of the doctrine of Necessity. No farmer carrying his corn to market doubts the sale of it at the market price. The master of a manufactory no more doubts that he can purchase the human labour necessary for his purposes, than that his machinery will act as they have been accustomed to act.

But, whilst none have scrupled to admit necessity as influencing matter, many have disputed its dominion over mind. Independently of its militating with the received ideas of the justice of God, it is by no means obvious to a superficial enquiry. When the mind observes its own operations, it feels no connexion of motive and action: but as we know "nothing more of causation than the constant conjunction of objects and the consequent inference of one from the other, as we find that these two circumstances are universally allowed to have place in voluntary action, we may be easily led to own that they are subjected to the necessity common to all causes."
The actions of the will have a regular conjunction with circumstances and characters; motive is, to voluntary action, what cause is to effect. But the only idea we can form of causation is a constant conjunction of similar objects, and the consequent inference of one from the other: wherever this is the case necessity is clearly established.

The idea of liberty, applied metaphorically to the will, has sprung from a misconception of the meaning of the word power. What is power?—id quod potest, that which can produce any given effect. To deny power, is to say that nothing can or has the power to be or act. In the only true sense of the word power, it applies with equal force to the loadstone as to the human will. Do you think these motives, which I shall present, are powerful enough to rouse him? is a question just as common as, Do you think this lever has the power of raising this weight? The advocates of free-will assert that the will has the power of refusing to be determined by the strongest motive:
but the strongest motive is that which, overcoming all others, ultimately prevails; this assertion therefore amounts to a denial of the will being ultimately determined by that motive which does determine it, which is absurd. But it is equally certain that a man cannot resist the strongest motive, as that he cannot overcome a physical impossibility.

The doctrine of Necessity tends to introduce a great change into the established notions of morality, and utterly to destroy religion. Reward and punishment must be considered, by the Necessarian, merely as motives which he would employ in order to procure the adoption or abandonment of any given line of conduct. Desert, in the present sense of the word, would no longer have any meaning; and he who should inflict pain upon another, for no better reason than that he deserved it, would only gratify his revenge under pretence of satisfying justice. It is not enough, says the advocate of free-will, that a criminal should be prevented from a repetition of his crime: he should feel pain; and his torments, when justly inflicted, ought precisely to be proportioned to his fault. But utility is morality; that which is incapable of producing happiness is useless; and though the crime of Damiens must be condemned, yet the frightful torments which revenge, under the name of justice, inflicted on this unhappy man, cannot be supposed to have augmented, even at the long run, the stock of pleasurable sensation in the world. At the same time, the doctrine of Necessity does not in the least diminish our disapprobation of vice. The conviction which all feel, that a viper is a poisonous animal, and that a tiger is constrained, by the inevitable condition of his existence, to devour men, does not induce us to avoid them less sedulously, or, even more, to hesitate in destroying them: but he would surely be of a hard heart, who, meeting with a serpent on a desert island, or in a situation where it was incapable of injury, should wantonly deprive it of existence. A Necessarian is inconsequent to his own principles, if he indulges in hatred or contempt; the compassion which he feels for the criminal is unmixed with a desire of injuring him: he looks with an elevated and dreadless composure upon the links of the universal chain as they pass before his eyes; whilst cowardice, curiosity and inconsistency only assail him in proportion to the feebleness and indistinctness with which he has perceived and rejected the delusions of free-will.

Religion is the perception of the relation in which we stand to the principle of the universe. But if the principle of the universe be not an organic being, the model and prototype of man, the relation between it and human beings are absolutely none. Without some insight into its will respecting our actions, religion is nugatory and vain. But will is only a mode of animal mind; moral qualities also are such as only a human being can possess; to attribute them to the principle of the universe, is to annex to it properties incompatible with any possible definition of its nature. It is probable that the word God was originally only an expression denoting the unknown cause of the known events which men perceived in the universe. By the vulgar mistake of a metaphor for a real being, of a word for a thing, it became a man, endowed with human qualities and governing the universe as an earthly monarch governs his kingdom. Their addresses to this imaginary being, indeed, are much in the same style as those of subjects to a king. They acknowledge his benevolence, deplore his anger, and supplicate his favour.

But the doctrine of Necessity teaches us, that in no case could any event have happened otherwise than it did happen, and that, if God is the author of good, he is also the author of evil; that, if he is entitled to our gratitude for the one, he is entitled to our hatred for the other; that, admitting the existence of this hypothetic being, he is also subjected to the dominion of an immutable necessity. It is plain that the same arguments which prove that God is the author of food, light, and life, prove him also to be the author of poison, darkness, and death. The wide-wasting earthquake, the storm, the battle, and the tyranny, are attributable to this hypothetic being in the same degree as the fairest forms of nature, sunshine, liberty, and peace.

But we are taught, by the doctrine of Necessity, that there is neither good nor evil in the universe, otherwise than as the events to which we apply these epithets have relation to our own peculiar mode of being. Still less than with the hypothesis of a God, will the doctrine of Necessity accord with the belief of a future state of punishment. God made man such as he is, and then damned him for being so; for to say that God was the author of all good, and man the author of all evil, is to say that one man made a straight line and a crooked one, and another man made the incongruity.

A Mahometan story, much to the present purpose, is recorded, wherein Adam and Moses are introduced disputing before God in the following manner. Thou, says Moses, art Adam, whom God created, and animated with the breath of life, and caused to be worshipped by the angels, and placed in Paradise, from whence mankind have been expelled for thy fault. Whereunto Adam answered, Thou art Moses, whom God chose for his apostle, and entrusted with his word, by giving thee the tables of the law, and whom he vouchsafed to admit to discourse with himself.
How many years dost thou find that the law was written before I was created? Says Moses, Forty. And dost thou not find, replied Adam, these words therein, And Adam rebelled against his Lord and transgressed? Which Moses confessing, Dost thou therefore blame me, continued he, for doing that which God wrote of me that I should do, forty years before I was created, nay, for what was decreed concerning me fifty thousand years before the creation of heaven and earth?—Sale’s Prelim. Disc. to the Koran, page 164.

VII.—Page 52.

There is no God! ¹

This negation must be understood solely to affect a creative Deity. The hypothesis of a pervading Spirit coeternal with the universe remains unshaken.

A close examination of the validity of the proofs adduced to support any proposition is the only secure way of attaining truth, on the advantages of which it is unnecessary to descant: our knowledge of the existence of a Deity is a subject of such importance that it cannot be too minutely investigated; in consequence of this conviction we proceed briefly and impartially to examine the proofs which have been adduced. It is necessary first to consider the nature of belief.

When a proposition is offered to the mind, it perceives the agreement or disagreement of the ideas of which it is composed. A perception of their agreement is termed belief. Many obstacles frequently prevent this perception from being immediate; these the mind attempts to remove in order that the perception may be distinct. The mind is active in the investigation, in order to perfect the state of perception of the relation which the component ideas of the proposition bear to each, which is passive: the investigation being confused with the perception, has induced many falsely to imagine that the mind is active in belief,—that belief is an act of volition,—in consequence of which it may be regulated by the mind. Pursuing, continuing this mistake, they have attached a degree of criminality to disbelief, of which, in its nature, it is incapable: it is equally incapable of merit.

¹ This note opens with a revised reprint of The Necessity of Atheism, the tract of historical reputation, published by Shelley at Oxford, and made the proximate cause of his expulsion from the University. The variations in detail between the issue of 1811 and this reprint of 1813 are not inconsiderable.—Ed.

Belief, then, is a passion, the strength of which, like every other passion, is in precise proportion to the degrees of excitement.

The degrees of excitement are three.

The senses are the sources of all knowledge to the mind; consequently their evidence claims the strongest assent.

The decision of the mind, founded upon our own experience, derived from these sources, claims the next degree.

The experience of others, which addresses itself to the former one, occupies the lowest degree.

(A graduated scale, on which should be marked the capabilities of propositions to approach to the test of the senses, would be a just barometer of the belief which ought to be attached to them.)

Consequently no testimony can be admitted which is contrary to reason; reason is founded on the evidence of our senses.

Every proof may be referred to one of these three divisions: it is to be considered what arguments we receive from each of them, which should convince us of the existence of a Deity.

1st. The evidence of the senses. If the Deity should appear to us, if he should convince our senses of his existence, this revelation would necessarily command belief. Those to whom the Deity has thus appeared have the strongest possible conviction of his existence. But the God of Theologians is incapable of local visibility.

2nd. Reason. It is urged that man knows that whatever is must either have had a beginning or have existed from all eternity: he also knows that whatever is not eternal must have had a cause. When this reasoning is applied to the universe, it is necessary to prove that it was created: until that is clearly demonstrated, we may reasonably suppose that it has endured from all eternity. We must prove design before we can infer a designer. The only idea which we can form of causation is derivable from the constant conjunction of objects, and the consequent inference of one from the other. In a case where two propositions are diametrically opposite, the mind believes that which is least incomprehensible;—it is easier to suppose that the universe has existed from all eternity, than to conceive a being beyond its limits capable of creating it: if the mind sinks beneath the weight of one, is it an alleviation to increase the intolerability of the burden?

The other argument, which is founded on a man's knowledge of his own existence, stands thus. A man knows not only that he now is, but that once he was not; consequently there must have been a cause. But our idea of causation is alone derivable from the constant conjunction of objects and the consequent inference of one from the other; and, reasoning experimentally, we can only infer from effects, causes exactly adequate to those effects. But there certainly is a generative power which is effected by certain instruments; we cannot prove that it is inherent in these instruments; nor is the contrary hypothesis capable of demonstration: we admit that the generative power is incomprehensible; but to suppose that the same effect is produced by an eternal, omniscient, omnipotent being, leaves the cause in the same obscurity, but renders it more incomprehensible.

3rd. Testimony. It is required that testimony should not be contrary to reason. The testimony that the Deity convinces the senses of men of his existence can only be admitted by us, if our mind considers it less probable that these men should have been deceived, than that the Deity should have appeared to them. Our reason can never admit the testimony of men, who not only declare that they were eye-witnesses of miracles, but that the Deity was irrational; for he commanded that he should be believed, he proposed the highest rewards for faith, eternal punishments for disbelief. We can only command voluntary actions; belief is not an act of volition; the mind is even passive, or involuntarily active; from this it is evident that we have no sufficient testimony, or rather that testimony is insufficient to prove the being of a God. It has been before shown that it cannot be deduced from reason. They alone, then, who have been convinced by the evidence of the senses, can believe it.

Hence it is evident that, having no proofs from either of the three sources of conviction, the mind cannot believe the existence of a creative God: it is also evident that, as belief is a passion of the mind, no degree of criminality is attachable to disbelief, and that they only are reprehensible who neglect to remove the false medium through which their mind views any subject of discussion. Every reflecting mind must acknowledge that there is no proof of the existence of a Deity.¹

God is an hypothesis, and, as such, stands in need of proof: the omnis probandi rests on the theist. Sir Isaac Newton says: Hypotheses non fingo, quie quid enim ex phenomenonis non deductur, hypothesis vocanda est, et hypothesis vel metaphysica, vel physica, vel qualitatum occultarum, seu mechanica, in philosophia locum non habent. To all proofs of the existence of a creative God apply this valuable rule. We see a variety of bodies possessing a variety of powers: we merely know their effects; we are in a state of ignorance with respect to their essences and causes. These Newton calls the phenomena of things; but the pride of philosophy is unwilling to admit of its ignorance of their causes. From the phenomena, which are the objects of our senses, we attempt to infer a cause, which we call God, and gratuitously endow it with all negative and contradictory qualities. From this hypothesis we invent this general name, to conceal our ignorance of causes and essences. The being called God by no means answers with the conditions prescribed by Newton; it bears every mark of a veil woven by philosophical conceit, to hide the ignorance of philosophers even from themselves. They borrow the threads of its texture from the anthropomorphism of the vulgar. Words have been used by sophists for the same purposes, from the occult qualities of the peripatetics to the effluvium of Boyle and the erinities or nebulae of Herschel. God is represented as infinite, eternal, incomprehensible; he is contained under every predicate in non that the logic of ignorance could fabricate. Even his worshippers allow that it is impossible to form any idea of him: they exclaim with the French poet,

¹ It is at this point that the original tract The Necessity of Atheism ends with a "Q.E.D."—Ed.

Pour dire ce qu'il est, il faut être lui-même.

Lord Bacon says, that "atheism leaves to man reason, philosophy, natural piety, laws, reputation, and every thing that can serve to conduct him to virtue; but superstition destroys all these, and erects itself into a tyranny over the understandings of men: hence atheism never disturbs the government, but renders man more clear-sighted, since he sees nothing beyond the boundaries of the present life." Bacon's Moral Essays.

La première théologie de l'homme lui fit d'abord craindre et adorer les élémens même, des objets matériels et grossiers; il rendit ensuite ses homages à des agents présidens aux élémens, à des génies inférieurs, à des héros, ou à des hommes doués de grands qualités. A force de réfléchir il crut simplifier les choses en soumettant la nature entière à un seul agent, à un esprit, à une âme universelle, qui mettoit cette nature et ses parties en mouvement. En remontant des causes en causes, les mortels ont fini par ne rien voir; et c'est dans cette obscurité qu'ils ont placé leur Dieu; c'est dans cette abîme ténébreux que leur imagination inquiète travaille toujours à se fabriquer des chimères, que les affligent jusqu'à ce que la connaissance de la nature les détrompe des phantômes qu'ils ont toujours si vainement adorés.

Si nous voulons nous rendre compte de nos idées sur la Divinité, nous serons obligés de convenir que, par le mot Dieu, les hommes n'ont jamais pu désigner que la cause la plus cachée, la plus éloignée, la plus inconnue des effets qu'ils voyoient: ils ne font usage de ce mot, que lorsque le jeu des causes naturelles et connues cesse d'être visible pour eux; dès qu'ils perdent le fil de ces causes, ou dès que leur esprit ne peut plus en suivre la chaîne ils tranchent leur difficulté, et terminent leur recherches en appelant Dieu la dernière des causes, c'est-à-dire celle qui est au-delà de toutes les causes qu'ils connoissent ; ainsi ils ne font qu'assigner une dénomination vague à une cause ignorée, à laquelle leur paresse ou les bornes de leurs connoissances les forcent de s'arrêter. Toutes les fois qu'on nous dit que Dieu est l'auteur de quelque phénomène, cela signifie qu'on ignore comment un tel phénomène a pu s'opérer par le secours des forces ou des causes que nous connoissons dans la nature. C'est ainsi que le commun des hommes, dont l'ignorance est la partage, attribue à la Divinité non seulement les effets inusités que les frappent, mais encore les événements les plus simples, dont les causes sont les plus faciles à connaître pour quiconque a pu les méditer. En un mot, l'homme a toujours respecté les causes inconnues des effets surprenans, que son ignorance l'empêche de démêler. Ce fut sur les deus de la nature que les hommes élevèrent le colosse imaginaire de la Divinité.

Si l'ignorance de la nature donna la naissance aux dieux, la connaissance de la nature est faite pour les détruire. A mesure que l'homme s'instruit, ses forces et ses ressources augmentent avec ses lumières ; les sciences, les arts conservateurs, l'industrie, lui fournissent des secours ; l'expérience le rassure ou lui procure des moyens de résister aux efforts de biens des causes qui cessent de l'alarmer dès qu'il les a connues. En un mot, ses terres se dissipent dans la même proportion que son esprit s'éclaire. L'homme instruit cesse d'être superstitieux.

Ce n'est jamais que sur parole que des peuples entiers adorent le Dieu de leurs pères et de leurs prêtres : l'autorité, la confiance, la soumission, et l'habitude leur tiennent lieu de conviction et de preuves ; ils se prosternent et prient, parce que leurs pères leur ont appris à se prosterner et prier : mais pourquoi ceux-ci se sont-ils mis à genoux ? C'est que dans les temps éloignés leurs législateurs et leurs guides leur en ont fait un devoir. "Adorez et croyez," ont-ils dit, "des dieux que vous ne pouvez comprendre ; rappez-vous en à notre sagesse profonde ; nous en savons plus que vous sur la divinité." Mais pourquoi m'en rapporterai-je à vous ? C'est que Dieu le veut ainsi, c'est que Dieu vous punira si vous osez résister. Mais ce Dieu n'est-il donc pas la chose en question ? Cependant les hommes se sont toujours payés de ce cercle vicieux ; la paresse de leur esprit leur fit trouver plus court de s’en rapporter au jugement des autres. Toutes les notions religieuses sont fondées uniquement sur l’autorité ; toutes les religions du monde défendent l’exactitude et ne veulent pas que l’on raisonne ; c’est l’autorité qui veut qu’on croie en Dieu ; ce Dieu n’est lui-même fonde que sur l’autorité de quelques hommes qui prétendent le connaître, et venir de sa part pour l’annoncer à la terre. Un Dieu fait par les hommes, a sans doutes besoin des hommes pour se faire connaître aux hommes.

Ne seroit-ce donc que pour des prêtres, des inspirés, des métaphysiciens que seroit reservée la conviction de l’existence d’un Dieu, que l’on dit neanmoins si nécessaire à tout le genre-humain ? Mais trouvons-nous de l’harmonie entre les opinions théologiques des différents inspirés, ou des penseurs repandus sur la terre ? Ceux même que font profession d’adorer le même Dieu, sont-ils d’accord sur son compte ? Sont-ils contents des preuves que leurs collègues apportent de son existence ? Souscrivent-ils unanimement aux idées qu’ils présentent sur sa nature, sur sa conduite, sur la façon d’entendre ses prétendus oracles ? Est-il une contrée sur la terre, où la science de Dieu se soit réellement perfectionnée ? A-t-elle pris quelque part la consistence et l’uniformité que nous voyons prendre aux connaissances humaines, aux arts les plus utiles, aux métiers les plus meprisés des mots d’esprit d’immaterialité, de création, de prédestination, de grâce ; cette foule de distinctions subtiles dont la théologie s’est partout remplie dans quelques pays, ces inventions si ingénieuses, imaginées par des penseurs que se sont succédés depuis tant de siècles, n’ont fait, hélas ! qu’embrouiller les choses, et jamais le science le plus nécessaire aux hommes n’a jusqu’ici pu acquérir la moindre fixité. Depuis des milliers d’années, ces rêveurs oisifs se sont perpétuellement relayés pour méditer la Divinité, pour deviner ses voies cachées, pour inventer des hypothèses propres à développer cette enigme importante. Leur peu de succès n’a point découragé la vanité théologique ; toujours on a parlé de Dieu ; on s’est égorgé pour lui, et cet être sublime demeure toujours le plus ignoré et le plus discuté.

Les hommes auraient été trop heureux, si, se bornant aux objets visibles qui les intéressent, ils eussent employé à perfectionner leurs sciences réelles, leurs loix, leur morale, leur éducation, la moitié des efforts qu'ils ont mis dans leurs recherches sur la Divinité. Ils auraient été bien plus sages encore, et plus fortunés, s'ils eussent pu consentir à laisser leurs guides désœuvrés se quereller entre eux, et sonder des profondeurs capables de les étourdir, sans se mêler de leurs disputes insensées. Mais il est de l'essence de l'ignorance d'attacher de l'importance à ce qu'elle ne comprend pas. La vanité humaine fait que l'esprit se rôdit contre des difficultés. Plus un objet se derobe à nos yeux, plus nous faisons d'efforts pour le saisir, parce que dès-lors il aiguillone notre orgueil, il excite notre curiosité, il nous paroit intéressant. En combattant pour son Dieu chacun ne combattit en effet que pour les intérêts de sa propre vanité, qui de toutes les passions produits par la mal organization de la société, est la plus prompte à s'allarmer, et la plus propre à produire des tres grands folies.

Si écartant pour un moment les idées facheses que la théologie nous donne d'un Dieu capricieux, dont les décrets partiaux et despotiques décident du sort des humains, nous ne voulons fixer nos yeux que sur la bonté prétendue, que tous les hommes, même en tremblant devant ce Dieu, s'accordent à lui donner; si nous lui supposons le projet qu'on lui prête, de n'avoir travaillé que pour sa propre gloire, d'exiger les hommages des êtres intelligens; de ne chercher dans ses œuvres que le bien-être du genre-humain; comment concilier ces vues et ces dispositions avec l'ignorance vraiment invincible dans laquelle ce Dieu, si glorieux et si bon, laisse la plupart des hommes sur son compte? Si Dieu veut être connu, chéri, remercié, que ne se montre-t-il sous des traits favorables à tous ces êtres intelligens dont il veut être aimé et adoré? Pourquoi ne point se manifester à toute la terre d'une façon non équivoque, bien plus capable de nous convaincre, que ces révélations particuliers qui semblent accuser la Divinité d'une partialité fachense pour quelqu'uns de ses créatures? Le tout-puissant n'aurait-il donc pas des moyens plus convainquans de se montrer aux hommes que ces métamorphoses ridicules, ces incarnations prétendues, qui nous sont attestées par des écrivains si peu d'accord entre eux dans les récits qu'ils en font? Au lieu de tant de miracles, inventés pour prouver la mission divine de tant de législateurs, révérés par les différents peuples du monde, le souverain des esprits ne pouvait-il pas convaincre tout d'un coup l'esprit humain des choses qu'il a voulu lui faire connoître ? Au lieu de suspendre un soleil dans la voûte du firmament ; au lieu de repandre sans ordre les étoiles, et les constellations qui remplissent l'espace, n'ent-il pas été plus conforme aux vues d'un Dieu si jaloux de sa gloire et si bien intentionné pour l'homme; d'écrire d'une façon non sujette à dispute, son nom, ses attributs, ses volontés permanentes en caractères inéffacables, et lisibles également pour tous les habitants de la terre ? Personne alors n'aurait pu douter de l'existence d'un Dieu, de ses volontés claires, de ses intentions visibles. Sous les yeux de ce Dieu si terrible personne n'aurait eu l'audace de violer ses ordonnances ; nul mortel n'eût osé se mettre dans le cas d'attirer sa colère : enfin nul homme n'eût en le front d'en imposer en son nom, ou d'interpréter ses volontés suivant ses propres phantasies.

En effet, quand même on admetteroit l'existence du Dieu théologique et la réalité des attributs si discordans qu'on lui donne, l'on ne peut en rien conclure, pour autoriser la conduite ou les cultes qu'on prescrit de lui rendre. La théologie est vraiment le tonneau des Danaïdes. A force de qualités contradictoires et d'assertions hazardées, elle a, pour ainsi dire, tellement garroté son Dieu qu'elle l'a mis dans l'impossibilité d'agir. S'il est infiniment bon quelle raison aurions-nous de le craindre ? S'il est infiniment sage, de quoi nous inquiéter sur notre sort ? S'il sait tout, pourquoi l'avertir de nos besoins, et le fatiguer de nos prières ? S'il est partout, pourquoi lui élever des temples ? S'il est maître de tout, pourquoi lui faire des sacrifices et des offrandes ? S'il est juste, comment croire qu'il punisse des créatures qu'il a rempli de foiblesses ? Si la grace fait tout en elles, quelle raison aurait-il de les recom penser ? S'il est tout-puissant, comment l'offenser, comment lui resister ? S'il est raisonnable pourquoi se mettre-il en colère contre des aveugles, à qui il a laissé la liberté de déraisonner ? S'il est immuable, de quel droit pretendrions-nous faire changer ses decrets ? S'il est inconcevable, pourquoi nous en occuper ? S'IL A PARLE', PORRROI L'UNIVERS N'EST-IL PAS CONVAINCU ? Si la connaissance d'un Dieu est la plus nécessaire, pourquoi n'est-elle pas la plus évidente, et la plus claire.

_Système de la Nature, London, 1781._
The enlightened and benevolent Pliny thus publicly professes himself an atheist:—Quapropter effigiem Dei, formamque querere, imbécillitatis humanae reor. Quisquis est Deus (si modo est alius) et quaeunque in parte, totus est sensus, totus est visus, totus auditus, totus animae, totus animi, totus sui. * * * * * Imperfecte vero in homine naturae praecipua solatia ne demum quidem posse omnia. Namque nec sibi potest mortem consciscere, si velit, quod homini dedit optimum in tantis vita paenis; nec mortales aeternitate donare, aut revocare defunctos; nec facere ut qui vixit non vixerit, qui honores gessit non gesserit, nullumque habere in praeteritum jus, praeterquam oblivionis, atque (ut facetis quoque argumentis societas hae cun deo copuletur) ut bis dena vigintà non sint, et multa similiter efficere non posse.—Per quae, declaratur hand dubie, naturae potentiam id quoque esse, quod Deum vocamus.

The consistent Newtonian is necessarily an atheist. See Sir W. Drummond's Academical Questions, chap. iii.—Sir W. seems to consider the atheism to which it leads as a sufficient presumption of the falsehood of the system of gravitation: but surely it is more consistent with the good faith of philosophy to admit a deduction from facts than an hypothesis incapable of proof, although it might militate with the obstinate preconceptions of the mob. Had this author, instead of inveighing against the guilt and absurdity of atheism, demonstrated its falsehood, his conduct would have been more suited to the modesty of the sceptic and the toleration of the philosopher.

Omnia enim per Dei potentiam facta sunt: imo, quia natura potentia nulla est nisi ipsi Dei potentia, artem est nos catenmus Dei potentiam non intelligere, quatemus causas naturales ignoramus; adeoque sulte ad eandem Dei potentiam recurritur, quando rei alicuius, causam naturalem, sive est, ipsam Dei potentiam ignoramus.

Spinosa, Tract. Theologico-Pol. chap. i. page 14.
Ahasuerus, rise!

Ahasuerus the Jew crept forth from the dark cave of Mount Carmel. Near two thousand years have elapsed since he was first goaded by never-ending restlessness to rove the globe from pole to pole. When our Lord was wearied with the burden of his ponderous cross, and wanted to rest before the door of Ahasuerus, the unfeeling wretch drove him away with brutality. The Saviour of mankind staggered, sinking under the heavy load, but uttered no complaint. An angel of death appeared before Ahasuerus, and exclaimed indignantly, "Barbarian! thou hast denied rest to the Son of Man: be it denied thee also, until he comes to judge the world."

A black demon, let loose from hell upon Ahasuerus, goads him now from country to country; he is denied the consolation which death affords, and precluded from the rest of the peaceful grave.

Ahasuerus crept forth from the dark cave of Mount Carmel—he shook the dust from his beard—and taking up one of the skulls heaped there, hurled it down the eminence; it rebounded from the earth in shivered atoms. "This was my father!" roared Ahasuerus. Seven more skulls rolled down from rock to rock; while the infuriate Jew, following them with ghastly looks, exclaimed—"And these were my wives!" He still continued to hurl down skull after skull, roaring in dreadful accents—"And these, and these, and these were my children! They could die; but I! reprobate wretch, alas! I cannot die! Dreadful beyond conception is the judgment that hangs over me. Jerusalem fell—I crushed the sucking babe, and precipitated myself into the destructive flames. I cursed the 1 The fragment appears to be an adaptation from Christian Schubart's Der Ewige Jude: see The Pall Mall Gazette for 21 December 1866. It is probable that the translation was really picked up in Lincoln's Inn Fields. It is said to have been printed in 1802 in vol. iii. of The German Magazine; see Notes and Queries, Second Series, vol. v., p. 373.—Ed.

Romans—but, alas! alas! the restless curse held me by the hair,—and I could not die!

"Rome the giantess fell—I placed myself before the falling statue—she fell, and did not crush me. Nations sprung up and disappeared before me;—but I remained and did not die. From cloud-encircled cliffs did I precipitate myself into the ocean; but the foaming billows cast me upon the shore, and the burning arrow of existence pierced my cold heart again. I leaped into Etna’s flaming abyss, and roared with the giants for ten long months, polluting with my groans the Mount’s sulphureous mouth—ah! ten long months.
The volcano fermented, and in a fiery stream of lava cast me up. I lay torn by the torture-snakes of hell amid the glowing cinders, and yet continued to exist.
—A forest was on fire: I darted on wings of fury and despair into the crackling wood. Fire dropped upon me from the trees, but the flames only singed my limbs; alas! it could not consume them.—I now mixed with the butchers of mankind, and plunged in the tempest of the raging battle. I roared defiance to the infuriate Gaul, defiance to the victorious German; but arrows and spears rebounded in shivers from my body. The Saracen’s flaming sword broke upon my skull: balls in vain hissed upon me: the lightnings of battle glared harmless around my loins: in vain did the elephant trample on me, in vain the iron hoof of the wrathful steed! The mine, big with destructive power, burst upon me, and hurled me high in the air—I fell on heaps of smoking limbs, but was only singed. The giant’s steel club rebounded from my body; the executioner’s hand could not strangle me, the tiger’s tooth could not pierce me, nor would the hungry lion in the circus devour me. I cohabited with poisonous snakes, and pinched the red crest of the dragon.—The serpent stung, but could not destroy me. The dragon tormented, but dared not to devour me.—I now provoked the fury of tyrants: I said to Nero, ‘Thou art a bloodhound!’ I said to Christiern, ‘Thou art a bloodhound!’ I said to Muley Ismail, ‘Thou art a bloodhound!’—The tyrants invented cruel torments, but did not kill me.————Ha!
not to be able to die—not to be able to die—not to be permitted to rest after the toils of life—to be doomed to be imprisoned for ever in the clay-formed dungeon —to be for ever clogged with this worthless body, its load of diseases and infirmities—to be condemned to hold for millenniums that yawning monster Sameness, and Time, that hungry hyena, ever bearing children, and ever devouring again her offspring!—Ha! not to be permitted to die! Awful avenger in heaven, hast thou in thine armoury of wrath a punishment more dreadful? then let it thunder upon me, command a hurricane to sweep me down to the foot of Carmel, that I there may lie extended; may pant, and writhe, and die!"

This fragment is the translation of part of some German work, whose title I have vainly endeavoured to discover. I picked it up, dirty and torn, some years ago, in Lincoln's-Inn Fields.

VII.—Page 56.

I will beget a son, and he shall bear
The sins of all the world. 1

A book is put into our hands when children, called the Bible, the purport of whose history is briefly this: That God made the earth in six days, and there planted a delightful garden, in which he placed the first pair of human beings. In the midst of the garden he planted a tree, whose fruit, although within their reach, they were forbidden to touch. That the Devil, in the shape of a snake, persuaded them to eat of this fruit; in consequence of which God condemned both them and their posterity yet unborn, to satisfy his justice by their eternal misery. That, four thousand years after these events, (the human race in the meanwhile having gone unredeemed to perdition,)

1 In the summer of 1812 Shelley caused to be printed a pamphlet entitled A Letter to Lord Ellenborough, Occasioned by the Sentence which he passed on Mr. D. J. Eaton, As Publisher of the Third Part of Paine's Age of Reason. For the purposes of the present note he eliminated from the Letter the passages which were personal to Lord Ellenborough and Mr. Eaton, added other passages, and revised to some extent so much of the remainder as he incorporated into the Queen Mab notes.—Ed.
God engendered with the betrothed wife of a carpenter in Judea (whose virginity was nevertheless uninjured), and begat a Son, whose name was Jesus Christ; and who was crucified and died, in order that no more men might be devoted to hell-fire, he bearing the burthen of his Father's displeasure by proxy. The book states, in addition, that the soul of whoever disbelieves this sacrifice will be burned with everlasting fire.

During many ages of misery and darkness this story gained implicit belief; but at length men arose who suspected that it was a fable and imposture, and that Jesus Christ, so far from being a God, was only a man like themselves. But a numerous set of men, who derived and still derive immense emoluments from this opinion, in the shape of a popular belief, told the vulgar that, if they did not believe in the Bible, they would be damned to all eternity; and burned, imprisoned, and poisoned all the unbiassed and unconnected enquirers who occasionally arose. They still oppress them, so far as the people, now become more enlightened, will allow.

The belief in all that the Bible contains, is called Christianity. A Roman governor of Judea, at the instances of a priest-led mob, crucified a man called Jesus eighteen centuries ago. He was a man of pure life, who desired to rescue his countrymen from the tyranny of their barbarous and degrading superstitions. The common fate of all who desire to benefit mankind awaited him. The rabble, at the instigation of the priests, demanded his death, although his very judge made public acknowledgment of his innocence. Jesus was sacrificed to the honour of that God with whom he was afterwards confounded. It is of importance, therefore, to distinguish between the pretended character of this being as the Son of God and the Saviour of the world, and his real character as a man, who, for a vain attempt to reform the world, paid the forfeit of his life to that overbearing tyranny which has since so long desolated the universe in his name. Whilst the one is a hypocritical daemon, who announces himself as the God of compassion and peace, even whilst he stretches forth his blood-red hand with the sword of discord to waste the earth, having confessedly devised this scheme of desolation from eternity; the other stands in the foremost list of those true heroes who have died in the glorious martyrdom of liberty, and have braved torture, contempt, and poverty, in the cause of suffering humanity.\(^1\)

The vulgar, ever in extremes, became persuaded that the crucifixion of Jesus was a supernatural event. Testimonies of miracles, so frequent in unenlightened ages, were not wanting to prove that he was something divine. This belief, rolling through the lapse of ages, met with the reveries of Plato and the reasonings of Aristotle, and acquired force and extent, until the divinity of Jesus became a dogma, which to dispute was death, which to doubt was infamy.

Christianity is now the established religion: he who attempts to impugn it, must be contented to behold murderers and traitors take precedence of him in public opinion; though, if his genius be equal to his courage, and assisted by a peculiar coalition of circumstances, future ages may exalt him to a divinity, and persecute others in his name, as he was persecuted in the name of his predecessor in the homage of the world.

The same means that have supported every other popular belief have supported Christianity. War, imprisonment, assassination, and falsehood; deeds of unexampled and incomparable atrocity have made it what it is. The blood shed by the votaries of the God of mercy and peace, since the establishment of his religion, would probably suffice to drown all other sectaries now on the habitable globe. We derive from our ancestors a faith thus fostered and supported: we quarrel, persecute, and hate for its maintenance. Even under a government which, whilst it infringes the very right of thought and speech, boasts of permitting the liberty of the press, a man is pilloried and imprisoned because he is a deist, and no one raises his voice in the indignation of outraged humanity. But it is ever a proof that the falsehood of a proposition is felt by those who use coercion, not reasoning, to procure its admission; and a dispassionate observer would feel himself more powerfully interested in favour of a man, who, depending on the truth of his opinions, simply stated his reasons for entertaining them, than in that of his aggressor, who, daringly avowing his unwillingness or incapacity to answer them by argument, proceeded to repress the energies and break the spirit of their promuligator by that torture and imprisonment whose infliction he could command.

\(^1\) Since writing this note I have some reason to suspect, that Jesus was an ambitious man, who aspired to the throne of Judea. [Shelley's materer judgment dismissed that suspicion.—Ed.]

Analogy seems to favour the opinion that as, like other systems, Christianity has arisen and augmented, so like them it will decay and perish; that, as violence, darkness and deceit, not reasoning and persuasion, have procured its admission among mankind, so, when enthusiasm has subsided, and time; that infallible controverter of false opinions, has involved its pretended evidences in the darkness of antiquity, it will become obsolete; that Milton's poem alone will give permanency to the remembrance of its absurdities; and that men will laugh as heartily at grace, faith, redemption, and original sin, as they now do at the metamorphoses of Jupiter, the miracles of Romish saints, the efficacy of witchcraft, and the appearance of departed spirits.

Had the Christian religion commenced and continued by the mere force of reasoning and persuasion, the preceding analogy would be inadmissible. We should never speculate on the future obsoleteness of a system perfectly conformable to nature and reason: it would endure so long as they endured; it would be a truth as indisputable as the light of the sun, the criminality of murder, and other facts, whose evidence, depending on our organization and relative situations, must remain acknowledged as satisfactory so long as man is man. It is an incontrovertible fact, the consideration of which ought to repress the hasty conclusions of credulity, or moderate its obstinacy in maintaining them, that, had the Jews not been a fanatical race of men, had even the resolution of Pontius Pilate been equal to his candour, the Christian religion never could have prevailed, it could not even have existed; on so feeble a thread hangs the most cherished opinion of a sixth of the human race! When will the vulgar learn humility? When will the pride of ignorance blush at having believed before it could comprehend?

Either the Christian religion is true, or it is false:
if true, it comes from God, and its authenticity can admit of doubt and dispute no further than its omnipotent author is willing to allow. Either the power or the goodness of God is called in question, if he leaves those doctrines most essential to the well-being of man in doubt and dispute; the only ones which, since their promulgation, have been the subject of unceasing cavil, the cause of irreconcilable hatred. If God has spoken, why is the universe not convinced?

There is this passage in the Christian Scriptures: "Those who obey not God, and believe not the Gospel of his Son, shall be punished with everlasting destruction." This is the pivot upon which all religions turn: they all assume that it is in our power to believe or not to believe; whereas the mind can only believe that which it thinks true. A human being can only be supposed accountable for those actions which are influenced by his will. But belief is utterly distinct from and unconnected with volition: it is the apprehension of the agreement or disagreement of the ideas that compose any proposition. Belief is a passion, or involuntary operation of the mind, and, like other passions, its intensity is precisely proportionate to the degrees of excitement. Volition is essential to merit or demerit. But the Christian religion attaches the highest possible degrees of merit and demerit to that which is worthy of neither, and which is totally unconnected with the peculiar faculty of the mind, whose presence is essential to their being.

Christianity was intended to reform the world: had an all-wise Being planned it, nothing is more improbable than that it should have failed: omniscience would infallibly have foreseen the inutility of a scheme which experience demonstrates, to this age, to have been utterly unsuccessful.

Christianity inculcates the necessity of supplicating the Deity. Prayer may be considered under two points of view;—as an endeavour to change the intentions of God, or as a formal testimony of our obedience. But the former case supposes that the caprices of a limited intelligence can occasionally instruct the Creator of the world how to regulate the universe; and the latter, a certain degree of servility analogous to the loyalty demanded by earthly tyrants. Obedience indeed is only the pitiful and cowardly egotism of him who thinks that he can do something better than reason.

Christianity, like all other religions, rests upon miracles, prophecies, and martyrdoms. No religion ever existed which had not its prophets, its attested miracles, and, above all, crowds of devotees who would bear patiently the most horrible tortures to prove its authenticity. It should appear that in no case can a discriminating mind subscribe to the genuineness of a miracle. A miracle is an infraction of nature's law, by a supernatural cause; by a cause acting beyond that eternal circle within which all things are included. God breaks through the law of nature, that he may convince mankind of the truth of that revelation which, in spite of his precautions, has been, since its introduction, the subject of unceasing schism and cavil.

Miracles resolve themselves into the following question:—Whether it is more probable the laws of nature, hitherto so immutably harmonious, should have undergone violation, or that a man should have told a lie? Whether it is more probable that we are ignorant of the natural cause of an event, or that we know the supernatural one? That, in old times, when the powers of nature were less known than at present, a certain set of men were themselves deceived, or had some hidden motive for deceiving others; or that God begat a son, who, in his legislation, measuring merit by belief, evidenced himself to be totally ignorant of the powers of the human mind—of what is voluntary, and what is the contrary?

We have many instances of men telling lies;—none of an infraction of nature's laws, those laws of whose government alone we have any knowledge or experience. The records of all nations afford innumerable instances of men deceiving others either from vanity or interest, or themselves being deceived by the limitedness of their views and their ignorance of natural causes: but where is the accredited case of God having come upon earth, to give the lie to his own creations? There would be something truly wonderful in the appearance of a ghost; but the assertion of a child that he saw one as he passed through the church-yard is universally admitted to be less miraculous.

---

1 See Hume's Essay, vol. ii. page 121.

But even supposing that a man should raise a dead body to life before our eyes, and on this fact rest his claim to be considered the son of God;—the Humane Society restores drowned persons, and because it makes no mystery of the method it employs, its members are not mistaken for the sons of God. All that we have a right to infer from our ignorance of the cause of any event is that we do not know it: had the Mexicans attended to this simple rule when they heard the cannon of the Spaniards, they would not have considered them as gods: the experiments of modern chemistry would have defied the wisest philosophers of ancient Greece and Rome to have accounted for them on natural principles. An author of strong common sense has observed, that "a miracle is no miracle at second-hand;" he might have added, that a miracle is no miracle in any case; for until we are acquainted with all natural causes we have no reason to imagine others.

There remains to be considered another proof of Christianity—Prophecy. A book is written before a certain event, in which this event is foretold; how could the prophet have foreknown it without inspiration; how could he have been inspired without God? The greatest stress is laid on the prophecies of Moses and Hosea on the dispersion of the Jews, and that of Isaiah concerning the coming of the Messiah. The prophecy of Moses is a collection of every possible cursing and blessing; and it is so far from being marvellous that the one of dispersion should have been fulfilled, that it would have been more surprising if, out of all these, none should have taken effect. In Deuteronomy, chap. xxviii, ver. 64, where Moses explicitly foretells the dispersion, he states that they shall there serve gods of wood and stone: "And the Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth even to the other, and there thou shalt serve other gods, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even gods of wood and stone." The Jews are at this day remarkably tenacious of their religion. Moses also declares that they shall be subjected to these curses for disobedience to his ritual: "And it shall come to pass, if thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe to do all the commandments and statutes which I command you this day, that all these curses shall come upon thee and overtake thee.” Is this the real reason? The third, fourth and fifth chapters of Hosea are a piece of immodest confession. The indecent type might apply in a hundred senses to a hundred things. The fifty-third chapter of Isaiah is more explicit, yet it does not exceed in clearness the oracles of Delphos. The historical proof that Moses, Isaiah and Hosea did write when they are said to have written, is far from being clear and circumstantial.

But prophecy requires proof in its character as a miracle; we have no right to suppose that a man foreknew future events from God, until it is demonstrated that he neither could know them by his own exertions, nor that the writings which contain the prediction could possibly have been fabricated after the event pretended to be foretold. It is more probable that writings, pretending to divine inspiration, should have been fabricated after the fulfilment of their pretended prediction, than that they should have really been divinely inspired; when we consider that the latter supposition makes God at once the creator of the human mind and ignorant of its primary powers, particularly as we have numberless instances of false religions, and forged prophecies of things long past, and no accredited case of God having conversed with men directly or indirectly. It is also possible that the description of an event might have foregone its occurrence; but this is far from being a legitimate proof of a divine revelation, as many men, not pretending to the character of a prophet, have nevertheless, in this sense, prophesied.

Lord Chesterfield was never yet taken for a prophet, even by a bishop, yet he uttered this remarkable prediction: “The despotic government of France is screwed up to the highest pitch; a revolution is fast approaching; that revolution, I am convinced, will be radical and sanguinary.” This appeared in the letters of the prophet long before the accomplishment of this wonderful prediction. Now, have these particulars come to pass, or have they not? If they have, how could the Earl have foreknown them without inspiration? If we admit the truth of the Christian religion on testimony such as this, we must admit, on the same strength of evidence, that God has affixed the highest rewards to belief, and the eternal tortures of the never-dying worm to disbelief; both of which have been demonstrated to be involuntary.

The last proof of the Christian religion depends on the influence of the Holy Ghost. Theologians divide the influence of the Holy Ghost into its ordinary and extraordinary modes of operation. The latter is supposed to be that which inspired the Prophets and Apostles; and the former to be the grace of God, which summarily makes known the truth of his revelation, to those whose mind is fitted for its reception by a submissive perusal of his word. Persons convinced in this manner can do anything but account for their conviction, describe the time at which it happened, or the manner in which it came upon them. It is supposed to enter the mind by other channels than those of the senses, and therefore professes to be superior to reason founded on their experience.

Admitting, however, the usefulness or possibility of a divine revelation, unless we demolish the foundations of all human knowledge, it is requisite that our reason should previously demonstrate its genuineness; for, before we extinguish the steady ray of reason and common sense, it is fit that we should discover whether we cannot do without their assistance, whether or no there be any other which may suffice to guide us through the labyrinth of life: for, if a man is to be inspired upon all occasions, if he is to be sure of a thing because he is sure, if the ordinary operations of the spirit are not to be considered very extraordinary modes of demonstration, if enthusiasm is to usurp the place of proof, and madness that of sanity, all reasoning is superfluous. The Mahometan dies fighting for his prophet, the Indian immolates himself at the chariot-wheels of Brahma, the Hottentot worships an insect, the Negro a bunch of feathers, the Mexican sacrifices human victims! Their degree of conviction must certainly be very strong: it cannot arise from conviction, it must from feelings, the reward of their prayers. If each of these should affirm, in opposition to the strongest possible arguments, that inspiration carried internal evidence, I fear their inspired brethren, the orthodox Missionaries, would be so uncharitable as to pronounce them obstinate.

Miracles cannot be received as testimonies of a disputed fact, because all human testimony has ever been insufficient to establish the possibility of miracles. That which is incapable of proof itself, is no proof of anything else. Propheey has also been rejected by the test of reason. Those, then, who have been actually inspired, are the only true believers in the Christian religion.

\[ \text{Mox numine viso} \]
\[ \text{Virginei tumuere sinus, inmuptaque mater} \]
\[ \text{Arcano stupuit compleri viscera partu} \] \[ \text{Auctorem peritura summ. Mortalia corda} \]
\[ \text{Artifecem texere poli, latuitque sub uno} \]
\[ \text{Pectore, qui totum late complectitur orbem.} \]

\text{CLAUDIAN, Carmen Paschale.}

Does not so monstrous and disgusting an absurdity carry its own infamy and refutation with itself?

VIII.—Page 67.

Him, still from hope to hope the bliss pursuing,
Which from the exhaustless lore of human weal
Dawns on the virtuous mind, the thoughts that rise
In time-destroying infiniteness, gift
With self-enshrined eternity, &c.

Time is our consciousness of the succession of ideas in our mind. Vivid sensation, of either pain or pleasure, makes the time seem long, as the common phrase is, because it renders us more acutely conscious of our ideas. If a mind be conscious of an hundred ideas during one minute, by the clock, and of two hundred during another, the latter of these spaces would actually occupy so much greater extent in the mind as two exceed one in quantity. If, therefore, the human mind, by any future improvement of its sensibility, should become conscious of an infinite number of ideas in a minute, that minute would be eternity. I do not hence infer that the actual space between the birth and death of a man will ever be prolonged; but that his sensibility is perfectible, and that the number of ideas which his mind is capable of receiving is indefinite. One man is stretched on the rack during twelve hours; another sleeps soundly in his bed: the difference of time perceived by these two persons is immense; one hardly will believe that half an hour has elapsed, the other could credit that centuries had flown during his agony. Thus, the life of a man of virtue and talent, who should die in his thirtieth year, is, with regard to his own feelings, longer than that of a miserable priest-ridden slave, who dreams out a century of dulness. The one has perpetually cultivated his mental faculties, has rendered himself master of his thoughts, can abstract and generalize amid the lethargy of every-day business;—the other can slumber over the brightest moments of his being, and is unable to remember the happiest hour of his life. Perhaps the perishing ephemeron enjoys a longer life than the tortoise.

Dark flood of time!
Roll as it listeth thee—I measure not
By months or moments thy ambigious course.
Another may stand by me on the brink
And watch the bubble whirled beyond his ken
That pauses at my feet. The sense of love,
The thirst for action, and the impassioned thought Prolong my being: if I wake no more,
My life more actual living will contain
Than some grey veterans of the world's cold school,
Whose listless hours unprofitably roll,
By one enthusiast feeling unredeemed.

See Godwin's Pol. Jus. vol. i. page 411;—and Condorcet, Esquisse d'un Tableau Historique des Progrès de l'Esprit Humain, Époque ix.
VIII.—Page 67.

No longer now

He slays the lamb that looks him in the face.¹

I hold that the depravity of the physical and moral nature of man originated in his unnatural habits of life. The origin of man, like that of the universe of which he is a part, is enveloped in impenetrable mystery. His generations either had a beginning, or they had not. The weight of evidence in favour of each of these suppositions seems tolerably equal; and it is perfectly unimportant to the present argument which is assumed. The language spoken however by the mythology of nearly all religions seems to prove that, at some distant period, man forsook the path of nature, and sacrificed the purity and happiness of his being to unnatural appetites. The date of this event seems to have also been that of some great change in the climates of the earth, with which it has an obvious correspondence. The allegory of Adam and Eve eating of the tree of evil, and entailing upon their posterity the wrath of God and the loss of everlasting life, admits of no other explanation than the disease and crime that have flowed from unnatural diet. Milton was so well aware of this, that he makes Raphael thus exhibit to Adam the consequence of his disobedience:

Immediately a place
Before his eyes appeared: sad, noisome, dark:
A lazar-house it seem'd; wherein were laid Numbers of all diseased: all maladies
Of ghastly spasm, or racking torture, qualms
Of heart-sick agony, all feverous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs,
Intestine stone and ulcer, cholic pangs,
Daemoniac frenzy, moping melancholy,
And moon-struck madness, pining atrophy,
Marasmus, and wide-wasting pestilence,
Dropsies, and asthmas, and joint-racking rheums.

¹ After privately printing Queen Mab, Shelley in the same year 1813 revised this note and issued it with an appendix as a separate pamphlet, entitled A Vindication of Natural Diet.—En.
And how many thousands more might not be added to this frightful catalogue!

The story of Prometheus is one likewise which, although universally admitted to be allegorical, has never been satisfactorily explained. Prometheus stole fire from heaven, and was chained for this crime to mount Caucasus, where a vulture continually devoured his liver, that grew to meet its hunger. Hesiod says that, before the time of Prometheus, mankind were exempt from suffering; that they enjoyed a vigorous youth, and that death, when at length it came, approached like sleep, and gently closed their eyes. Again, so general was this opinion, that Horace, a poet of the Augustan age, writes—

Audax omnia perpeti,
Gens humana ruit per vetitum nefas;
Audax Iapeti genus
Ignem fraude mala gentibus intulit:
Post ignem aetheria domo
Subductum, macies et nova februm
Terris incubuit cohors,
Semotique prins tarda necessitas Lethi corripuit gradum.

How plain a language is spoken by all this. Prometheus (who represents the human race) effected some great change in the condition of his nature, and applied fire to culinary purposes; thus inventing an expedient for screening from his disgust the horrors of the shambles. From this moment his vitals were devoured by the vulture of disease. It consumed his being in every shape of its loathsome and infinite variety, inducing the soul-quelling sinkings of premature and violent death. All vice arose from the ruin of healthful innocence. Tyranny, superstition, commerce, and inequality, were then first known, when reason vainly attempted to guide the wanderings of exacerbated passion. I conclude this part of the subject with an extract from Mr. Newton's Defence of Vegetable Regimen, from whom I have borrowed this interpretation of the fable of Prometheus.

"Making allowance for such transposition of the events of the allegory as time might produce after the important truths were forgotten, which this portion of the ancient mythology was intended to transmit, the drift of the fable seems to be this:—Man at his creation was endowed with the gift of perpetual youth; that is, he was not formed to be a sickly suffering creature as we now see him, but to enjoy health, and to sink by slow degrees into the bosom of his parent earth without disease or pain. Prometheus first taught the use of animal food (primus bovem occidit Prometheus) and of fire, with which to render it more digestible and pleasing to the taste. Jupiter, and the rest of the gods, foreseeing the consequences of these inventions, were amused or irritated at the shortsighted devices of the newly-formed creature, and left him to experience the sad effects of them. Thirst, the necessary concomitant of a flesh diet,"(perhaps of all diet vitiated by culinary preparation,) "ensued; water was resorted to, and man forfeited the inestimable gift of health which he had received from heaven: he became diseased, the partaker of a precarious existence, and no longer descended slowly to his grave."

But just disease to luxury succeeds,
And every death its own avenger breeds;
The fury passions from that blood began,
And turned on man a fiercer savage—man.

Man, and the animals whom he has infected with his society, or depraved by his dominion, are alone diseased. The wild hog, the mouflon, the bison, and the wolf, are perfectly exempt from malady, and invariably die either from external violence, or natural old age. But the domestic hog, the sheep, the cow, and the dog, are subject to an incredible variety of distempers; and, like the corrupters of their nature, have physicians who thrive upon their miseries. The supereminence of man is like Satan's, a supereminence of pain; and the majority of his species, doomed to penury, disease and crime, have reason to curse the untoward event that, by enabling him to communicate his sensations, raised him above the level of his fellow animals. But the steps that have been taken are irrevocable. The whole of human science is comprised in one question:—How can the advantages of intellect and civilization be reconciled with the liberty and pure pleasures of natural life? How can we take the benefits, and reject the evils of the system, which is now interwoven with all the fibres of our being?—I believe that abstinence from animal food and spirituous liquors would in a great measure capacitiate us for the solution of this important question.

2 Return to Nature. Cadell, 1811.

It is true that mental and bodily derangement is attributable in part to other deviations from rectitude and nature than those which concern diet. The mistakes cherished by society respecting the connexion of the sexes, whence the misery and diseases of unsatisfied celibacy, unenjoying prostitution, and the premature arrival of puberty necessarily spring; the putrid atmosphere of crowded cities; the exhalations of chemical processes; the muffling of our bodies in superfluous apparel; the absurd treatment of infants:—all these, and innumerable other causes, contribute their nite to the mass of human evil.

Comparative anatomy teaches us that man resembles frugivorous animals in everything, and carnivorous in nothing; he has neither claws wherewith to seize his prey, nor distinct and pointed teeth to tear the living fibre. A Mandarin of the first class, with nails two inches long, would probably find them alone inefficient to hold even a hare. After every subterfuge of gluttony, the bull must be degraded into the ox, and the ram into the wether, by an unnatural and inhuman operation, that the flaccid fibre may offer a fainter resistance to rebellious nature. It is only by softening and disguising dead flesh by culinary preparation, that it is rendered susceptible of mastication or digestion; and that the sight of its bloody juices and raw horror does not excite intolerable loathing and disgust. Let the advocate of animal food force himself to a decisive experiment on its fitness, and, as Plutarch recommends, tear a living lamb with his teeth, and plunging his head into its vitals, slake his thirst with the steaming blood; when fresh from the deed of horror, let him revert to the irresistible instincts of nature that would rise in judgment against it, and say, Nature formed me for such work as this. Then, and then only, would he be consistent.

Man resembles no carnivorous animal. There is no exception, unless man be one, to the rule of herbivorous animals having cellulated colons.
The orang-outang perfectly resembles man both in the order and number of his teeth. The orang-outang is the most anthropomorphous of the ape tribe, all of which are strictly frugivorous. There is no other species of animals, which live on different food, in which this analogy exists. In many frugivorous animals, the canine teeth are more pointed and distinct than those of man. The resemblance also of the human stomach to that of the orang-outang, is greater than to that of any other animal.

The intestines are also identical with those of herbivorous animals, which present a larger surface for absorption and have ample and cellulated colons. The cecum also, though short, is larger than that of carnivorous animals, and even here the orang-outang retains its accustomed similarity.

The structure of the human frame, then, is that of one fitted to a pure vegetable diet, in every essential particular. It is true, that the reluctance to abstain from animal food, in those who have been long accustomed to its stimulus, is so great in some persons of weak mind as to be scarcely overcome; but this is far from bringing any argument in its favour. A lamb, which was fed for some time on flesh by a ship's crew, refused its natural diet at the end of the voyage. There are numerous instances of horses, sheep, oxen, and even wood-pigeons, having been taught to live upon flesh, until they have loathed their natural aliment. Young children evidently prefer pastry, oranges, apples, and other fruit, to the flesh of animals; until, by the gradual depravation of the digestive organs, the free use of vegetables has for a time produced serious inconveniences; for a time, I say, since there never was an instance wherein a change from spirituous liquors and animal food to vegetables and pure water, has failed ultimately to invigorate the body, by rendering its juices bland and consentaneous, and to restore to the mind that cheerfulness and elasticity, which not one in fifty possesses on the present system. A love of strong liquors is also with difficulty taught to infants. Almost every one remembers the wry faces which the first glass of port produced. Unsophisticated instinct is invariably unerring; but to decide on the fitness of animal food, from the perverted appetites which its constrained adoption produces, is to make the criminal a judge in his own cause: it is even worse, it is appealing to the infatuated drunkard in a question of the salubrity of brandy.

---

What is the cause of morbid action in the animal system? Not the air we breathe, for our fellow denizens of nature breathe the same uninjured; not the water we drink, (if remote from the pollutions of man and his inventions,) for the animals drink it too; not the earth we tread upon; not the unobscured sight of glorious nature, in the wood, the field, or the expanse of sky and ocean; nothing that we are or do in common with the undiseased inhabitants of the forest. Something then wherein we differ from them: our habit of altering our food by fire, so that our appetite is no longer a just criterion for the fitness of its gratification. Except in children, there remain no traces of that instinct which determines, in all other animals, what aliment is natural or otherwise; and so perfectly obliterated are they in the reasoning adults of our species, that it has become necessary to urge considerations drawn from comparative anatomy to prove that we are naturally frugivorous.

Crime is madness. Madness is disease. Whenever the cause of disease shall be discovered, the root, from which all vice and misery have so long overshadowed the globe, will lie bare to the axe. All the exertions of man, from that moment, may be considered as tending to the clear profit of his species. No sane mind in a sane body resolves upon a real crime. It is a man of violent passions, blood-shot eyes, and swollen veins, that alone can grasp the knife of murder. The system of a simple diet promises no Utopian advantages. It is no mere reform

1 The necessity of resorting to some means of purifying water, and the disease which arises from its adulteration in civilized countries, is sufficiently apparent.—See Dr. Lambe’s Reports on Cancer. I do not assert that the use of water is in itself unnatural, but that the unperverted palate would swallow no liquid capable of occasioning disease.
of legislation, whilst the furious passions and evil propensities of the human heart, in which it had its origin, are still unassuaged. It strikes at the root of all evil, and is an experiment which may be tried with success, not alone by nations, but by small societies, families, and even individuals. In no cases has a return to vegetable diet produced the slightest injury; in most it has been attended with changes undeniably beneficial. Should ever a physician be born with the genius of Locke, I am persuaded that he might trace all bodily and mental derangements to our unnatural habits, as clearly as that philosopher has traced all knowledge to sensation. What prolific sources of disease are not those mineral and vegetable poisons that have been introduced for its extirpation! How many thousands have become murderers and robbers, bigots and domestic tyrants, dissolute and abandoned adventurers, from the use of fermented liquors; who, had they slaked their thirst only with pure water, would have lived but to diffuse the happiness of their own unperverted feelings? How many groundless opinions and absurd institutions have not received a general sanction from the sottishness and intemperance of individuals! Who will assert that, had the populace of Paris satisfied their hunger at the ever-furnished table of vegetable nature, they would have lent their brutal suffrage to the proscription-list of Robespierre? Could a set of men, whose passions were not perverted by unnatural stimuli, look with coolness on an auto da fé? Is it to be believed that a being of gentle feelings, rising from his meal of roots, would take delight in sports of blood? Was Nero a man of temperate life? could you read calm health in his cheek, flushed with ungovernable propensities of hatred for the human race? Did Muley Ismael's pulse beat evenly, was his skin transparent, did his eyes beam with healthfulness, and its invariable concomitants, cheerfulness and benignity? Though history has decided none of these questions, a child could not hesitate to answer in the negative. Surely the bile-suffused cheek of Buonaparte, his wrinkled brow, and yellow eye, the ceaseless inquietude of his nervous system, speak no less plainly the character of his unrelenting ambition than his murders and his victories. It is impossible, had Buonaparte descended from a race of vegetable feeders, that he could have had either the inclination or the power to ascend the throne of the Bourbons. The desire of tyranny could scarcely be excited in the individual, the power to tyrannize would certainly not be delegated by a society neither frenzied by inebriation nor rendered impotent and irrational by disease. Pregnant indeed with inexhaustible calamity is the renunciation of instinct, as it concerns our physical nature; arithmetic cannot enumerate, nor reason perhaps suspect, the multitudinous sources of disease in civilized life. Even common water, that apparently innoxious pabulum, when corrupted by the filth of populous cities, is a deadly and insidious destroyer. Who can wonder that all the inducements held out by God himself in the Bible to virtue should have been vainer than a nurse's tale; and that those dogmas, by which he has there excited and justified the most ferocious propensities, should have alone been deemed essential; whilst Christians are in the daily practice of all those habits which have infected with disease and crime, not only the reprobate sons, but these favoured children of the common Father's love? Omnipotence itself could not save them from the consequences of this original and universal sin.

There is no disease, bodily or mental, which adoption of vegetable diet and pure water has not infallibly mitigated, wherever the experiment has been fairly tried. Debility is gradually converted into strength, disease into healthfulness; madness, in all its hideous variety, from the ravings of the fettered maniac, to the unaccountable irrationalities of ill temper, that make a hell of domestic life, into a calm and considerate evenness of temper, that alone might offer a certain pledge of the future moral reformation of society. On a natural system of diet, old age would be our last and our only malady; the term of our existence would be protracted; we should enjoy life, and no longer preclude others from the enjoyment of it; all sensational delights would be infinitely more exquisite and perfect; the very sense of being would then be a continued pleasure, such as we now feel it in some few and favoured moments of our youth. By all that is sacred in our hopes for the human race, I conjure those who love happiness and truth, to give a fair trial to the vegetable system. Reasoning is surely superfluous on a subject whose merits an experience of six months would set for ever at rest. But it is only among the enlightened and benevolent that so great a sacrifice of appetite and prejudice can be expected, even though its ultimate excellence should not admit of dispute. It is found easier, by the short-sighted victims of disease, to palliate their torments by medicine, than to prevent them by regimen. The vulgar of all ranks are invariably sensual and indocile; yet I cannot but feel myself persuaded that, when the benefits of vegetable diet are mathematically proved, when it is as clear that those who live naturally are exempt from premature death as that nine is not one, the most sottish of mankind will feel a preference towards a long and tranquil, contrasted with a short and painful life. On the average, out of sixty persons, four die in three years. Hopes are entertained that, in April 1814, a statement will be given, that sixty persons, all having lived more than three years on vegetables and pure water, are then in perfect health. More than two years have now elapsed; not one of them has died; no such example will be found in any sixty persons taken at random. Seventeen persons of all ages (the families of Dr. Lambe and Mr. Newton) have lived for seven years on this diet without a death, and almost without the slightest illness. Surely, when we consider that some of these were infants, and one a martyr to asthma now nearly subdued, we may challenge any seventeen persons taken at random in this city to exhibit a parallel case. Those who may have been excited to question the rectitude of established habits of diet, by these loose remarks, should consult Mr. Newton's luminous and eloquent essay.¹

1 Lambe's Reports on Cancer.

When these proofs come fairly before the world, and are clearly seen by all who understand arithmetic, it is scarcely possible that abstinence from aliments demonstrably pernicious should not become universal. In proportion to the number of proselytes, so will be the weight of evidence: and when a thousand persons

¹ The Return to Nature, or, A Defence of the Vegetable Regimen. Cadell, 1811.
can be produced, living on vegetables and distilled water, who have to dread no disease but old age, the world will be compelled to regard animal flesh and fermented liquors as slow but certain poisons. The change which would be produced by simpler habits on political economy is sufficiently remarkable. The monopolizing eater of animal flesh would no longer destroy his constitution by devouring an acre at a meal, and many loaves of bread would cease to contribute to gout, madness and apoplexy, in the shape of a pint of porter, or a dram of gin, when appeasing the long-protracted famine of the hard-working peasant's hungry babes. The quantity of nutritious vegetable matter, consumed in fattening the carcase of an ox, would afford ten times the sustenance, indeed, and incapable of generating disease, if gathered immediately from the bosom of the earth. The most fertile districts of the habitable globe are now actually cultivated by men for animals, at a delay and waste of aliment absolutely incapable of calculation. It is only the wealthy that can, to any great degree, even now, indulge the unnatural craving for dead flesh, and they pay for the greater licence of the privilege by subjection to supernumerary diseases. Again, the spirit of the nation that should take the lead in this great reform would insensibly become agricultural; commerce, with all its vice, selfishness and corruption, would gradually decline; more natural habits would produce gentler manners; and the excessive complication of political relations would be so far simplified, that every individual might feel and understand why he loved his country, and took a personal interest in its welfare. How would England, for example, depend on the caprices of foreign rulers, if she contained within herself all the necessaries, and despised whatever they possessed of the luxuries of life? How could they starve her into compliance with their views. Of what consequence would it be that they refused to take her woollen manufactures, when large and fertile tracts of the island ceased to be allotted to the waste of pasturage? On a natural system of diet, we should require no spices from India; no wines from Portugal, Spain, France, or Madeira; none of those multitudinous articles of luxury, for which every corner of the globe is rilled, and which are the causes of so much individual rival-ship, such calamitous and sanguinary national disputes. In the history of modern times, the avarice of commercial monopoly, no less than the ambition of weak and wicked chiefs, seems to have fomented the universal discord, to have added stubbornness to the mistakes of cabinets, and indolence to the infatuation of the people. Let it ever be remembered that it is the direct influence of commerce to make the interval between the richest and the poorest man wider and more unconquerable. Let it be remembered that it is a foe to every thing of real worth and excellence in the human character. The odious and disgusting aristocracy of wealth is built upon the ruins of all that is good in chivalry or republicanism; and luxury is the forerunner of a barbarism scarce capable of cure. Is it impossible to realize a state of society where all the energies of man shall be directed to the production of his solid happiness? Certainly, if this advantage (the object of all political speculation) be in any degree attainable, it is attainable only by a community which holds out no factitious incentives to the avarice and ambition of the few, and which is internally organized for the liberty, security and comfort of the many. None must be entrusted with power (and money is the completest species of power) who do not stand pledged to use it exclusively for the general benefit. But the use of animal flesh and fermented liquors directly militates with this equality of the rights of man. The peasant cannot gratify these fashionable cravings without leaving his family to starve. Without disease and war, those sweeping curtailers of population, pasturage would include a waste too great to be afforded. The labour requisite to support a family is far lighter\(^1\) than is usually \(^1\) It has come under the author's experience that some of the workmen on an embankment in North Wales, who, in consequence of the inability of the proprietor to pay them, seldom received their wages, have supported large families by cultivating small spots of sterile ground by moonlight. In the notes to Pratt's Poem, Bread, or the Poor, is an account of an industrious labourer who, by working in a small garden, before and after his day's task, attained to an enviable state of independence.

supposed. The peasantry work, not only for themselves, but for the aristocracy, the army, and the manufacturers.

The advantage of a reform in diet is obviously greater than that of any other. It strikes at the root of the evil. To remedy the abuses of legislation, before we annihilate the propensities by which they are produced, is to suppose that, by taking away the effect, the cause will cease to operate. But the efficacy of this system depends entirely on the proselytism of individuals, and grounds its merits, as a benefit to the community, upon the total change of the dietetic habits in its members. It proceeds securely from a number of particular cases to one that is universal, and has this advantage over the contrary mode, that one error does not invalidate all that has gone before.

Let not too much, however, be expected from this system. The healthiest among us is not exempt from hereditary disease. The most symmetrical, athletic, and long-lived, is a being inexpressibly inferior to what he would have been, had not the unnatural habits of his ancestors accumulated for him a certain portion of malady and deformity. In the most perfect specimen of civilized man, something is still found wanting by the physiological critic. Can a return to nature, then, instantaneously eradicate predispositions that have been slowly taking root in the silence of innumerable ages?—Indubitably not. All that I contend for is, that, from the moment of the relinquishing all unnatural habits, no new disease is generated, and that the predisposition to hereditary maladies gradually perishes, for want of its accustomed supply. In cases of consumption, cancer, gout, asthma, and scrofula, such is the invariable tendency of a diet of vegetables and pure water.

Those who may be induced by these remarks to give the vegetable system a fair trial should, in the first place, date the commencement of their practice from the moment of their conviction. All depends upon breaking through a pernicious habit resolutely and at once. Dr. Trotter⁠¹ asserts that no drunkard was ever reformed by gradually relinquishing his dram. Animal flesh, in its effects on the human stomach, is analogous to a dram. It is similar in the kind, though differing in the degree, of its operation. The proselyte to a pure diet must be warned to expect a temporary diminution of muscular strength. The subtraction of a powerful stimulus will suffice to account for this event. But it is only temporary, and is succeeded by an equable capability for exertion, far surpassing his former various and fluctuating strength. Above all, he will acquire an easiness of breathing, by which such exertion is performed, with a remarkable exemption from that painful and difficult panting now felt by almost every one, after hastily climbing an ordinary mountain. He will be equally capable of bodily exertion, or mental application, after as before his simple meal. He will feel none of the narcotic effects of ordinary diet. Irritability, the direct consequence of exhausting stimuli, would yield to the power of natural and tranquil impulses. He will no longer pine under the lethargy of ennui, that unconquerable weariness of life, more to be dreaded than death itself. He will escape the epidemic madness, which broods over its own injurious notions of the Deity, and “realizes the hell that priests and beldams feign.” Every man forms as it were his god from his own character; to the divinity of one of simple habits no offering would be more acceptable than the happiness of his creatures. He would be incapable of hating or persecuting others for the love of God. He will find, moreover, a system of simple diet to be a system of perfect epicurism. He will no longer be incessantly occupied in blunting and destroying those organs from which he expects his gratification. The pleasures of taste to be derived from a dinner of potatoes, beans, peas, turnips, lettuces, with a dessert of apples, gooseberries, strawberries, currants, raspberries, and, in winter, oranges, apples and pears, are far greater than is supposed. Those who wait until they can eat this plain fare with the sauce of appetite will scarcely join with the hypocritical sensualist at a lord-mayor’s feast, who declaims against the pleasures of the table. Solomon kept a thousand conembines, and owned in despair that all was vanity. The man whose happiness is constituted by the society of one amiable woman, would find some difficulty in sympathizing with the disappointment of this venerable debauchee.

⁠¹ See Trotter on the Nervous Temperament.
I address myself not only to the young enthusiast, the ardent devotee of truth and virtue, the pure and passionate moralist, yet unvitiated by the contagion of the world. He will embrace a pure system, from its abstract truth, its beauty, its simplicity, and its promise of wide-extended benefit; unless custom has turned poison into food, he will hate the brutal pleasures of the chase by instinct; it will be a contemplation full of horror and disappointment to his mind, that beings capable of the gentlest and most admirable sympathies should take delight in the death-pangs and last convulsions of dying animals. The elderly man whose youth has been poisoned by intemperance, or who has lived with apparent moderation, and is afflicted with a variety of painful maladies, would find his account in a beneficial change produced without the risk of poisonous medicines. The mother to whom the perpetual restlessness of disease, and unaccountable deaths incident to her children, are the causes of incurable unhappiness, would on this diet experience the satisfaction of beholding their perpetual healths and natural playfulness. The most valuable lives are daily destroyed by diseases that it is dangerous to palliate, and impossible to cure, by medicine. How much longer will man continue to pimp for the gluttony of death, his most insidious, implacable and eternal foe?

1 See Mr. Newton's book. His children are the most beautiful and healthy creatures it is possible to conceive; the girls are perfect models for a sculptor; their dispositions are also the most gentle and conciliating; the judicious treatment, which they experience in other points, may be a correlative cause of this. In the first five years of their life, of 18,000 children that are born, 7,500 die of various diseases; and how many more of those that survive are not rendered miserable by maladies not immediately mortal? The quality and quantity of a woman's milk are materially injured by the use of dead flesh. In an island near Iceland, where no vegetables are to be got, the children invariably die of tetanus, before they are three weeks old, and the population is supplied from the main land.—Sir G. Mackenzie's Hist. of Iceland. See also Emile, chap. i. pages 53, 54, 56.
'Αλλά δράκοντας ἀγρίους καλεῖτε καὶ παρδάλεις καὶ λεώντας, αὐτοὶ δὲ μαμφονεῖτε εἰς ὲμότητα καταλυτέντες ἱκείνους οὐδὲν. ἱκείνους μὲν γὰρ ὁ φόνος τροφῆ, ὡμέν δὲ ὄψιν ἵστην. * * * * *

"Οτι γὰρ οὐκ ἔστων ἄνθρωπῳ κατὰ φύσιν τὸ σαρκοφαγεῖν, πρῶτον μὲν ἀπὸ τῶν σωμάτων δηλοῦται τῆς κατασκευῆς. οὖντεν γὰρ ἐσμεν τὸ ἀνθρώπου σῶμα τῶν ἔτει σαρκοφαγία γεγονότων, οὐ γνωστῆς χείλους, οὐκ ἐξυπηρ., οὖν, οὐ πράγματος ὑποτίον πρόσεται, οὐ κοιλίας εὐστοία, καὶ πνεῦματος Θεομότης, ἑρέπαι καὶ κατεργάσασθαι δυνατή τὸ μισός καὶ κρεώδες. ἀλλὰ αὐτόθεν ἡ φύσι τῇ λειτουργίᾳ τῶν ὀδοντῶν, καὶ τῇ συμφράτητος τοῦ στόματος, καὶ τῇ μαλακότητι τῆς γλώσσης, καὶ τῇ πρὸς πέφυν ἀμιθνύτητι τοῦ πνεύματος, εξὸρυυται τὴν σαρκοφαγίαν. εἰ δὲ λεγέας περικεῖναι σεαυτόν ἐπὶ λαίαντην ἐδωκόν, ο βοϊλει φαγεῖν, πρῶτον αὐτὸς ἀπόκειναι ἀλλὰ αὐτὸς διὰ σεαυτοῦ, μη χρησάμενος κοπίδα, μηδὲ τυσάει τινί, μηδὲ πελέκη. ἀλλὰ ως λυκοῖ καὶ ἀρκουτ καὶ λεώτες αὐτοὶ ὡς ἑσθίονα φονεύοντι, ἀνέλε ὀγκατοτ βοῦν, ἢ στόματι σῦν, ἢ ἄρσε, ἢ λαγών, διάφρηξον, καὶ φάγε προσπεσὼν ἐπὶ ζώντος, ως ἱκείνα.

* * * * *

'Ἡμεῖς δὲ οὕτως ἐν τῷ μαμφόνῃ προφρύμει, ὅστις οἶον τὸ κρέας προσαγορεύοιμεν, εἰτ' οἶον πρὸς αὐτὸ τὸ κρέας δρόμεθα, ἀναμεγέντες ἑλατον, οἶον, μὲλι, γάρον, ὀξος, ἡνύσμασι Συρμαίας, Ἀράβακοις, ὥσπερ ὄντως νεκρόν ἐναιαύξομεν. καὶ γὰρ οὕτως αὐτῶν διαλυθῶν καὶ μαλακθέντων καὶ τρόπων τινα κρεσοπατέντων ἔργον ἔστι τὴν πέφυν κρατήσας' καὶ διακρατήθεσις δὲ δεινᾶς βαρύτητας ἐμποιεῖ καὶ νοσῶδεις ἀπεψίας.

* * * * *

Οὐτῶ τὸ πρῶτον ἀγριόν τι ζώον ἐβρῶθή καὶ κακοῦργον, εἰτ' ὄρνης τίς, ἢ ἱζίτις, ἐλκυστο' καὶ γενέμονεν οὕτως καὶ προμελητήσαν ἐν ἱκείνος τὸ νικόν, ἐπὶ βοῦν ἐργάτην ἦλθε, καὶ τὸ κοσμοῦν πρόβατον, καὶ τὸν οἰκοφόρον ἀλεκτρύνονα' καὶ κατὰ μικρὸν οὕτω τὴν ἀπλησίαν τοιχώμενος, ἐπὶ σφαγάς ἄνθρωπων, καὶ φόνους καὶ πολέμους προήλθον.

Πλοῦτ. περὶ τῆς σαρκοφαγίας
ALASTOR;
OR, THE SPIRIT OF SOLITUDE: AND OTHER POEMS.

1816.
ALASTOR;

OR,

THE SPIRIT OF SOLITUDE:

AND OTHER POEMS.

SHELLEY'S PREFACE.

The poem entitled "Alastor," may be considered as allegorical of one of the most interesting situations of the human mind. It represents a youth of uncorrupted feelings and adventurous genius led forth by an imagination inflamed and purified through familiarity with all that is excellent and majestic, to the contemplation of the universe. He drinks deep of the fountains of knowledge, and is still insatiate. The magnificence and beauty of the external world sinks profoundly into the frame of his conceptions, and affords to their modifications a variety not to be exhausted. So long as it is possible for his desires to point towards objects thus infinite and unmeasured, he is joyous, and tranquil, and self-possessed. But the period arrives when these objects cease to suffice. His mind is at length suddenly awakened and thirsts for intercourse with an intelligence similar to itself. He images to himself the Being whom he loves. Conversant with speculations of the sublimest and most perfect natures, the vision in which he embodies his own imaginations unites all of wonderful, or wise, or beautiful, which the poet, the philosopher, or the lover could depicture. The intellectual faculties, the imagination, the functions of sense, have their respective requisitions on the sympathy of corresponding powers in other human beings. The Poet is represented as uniting these requisitions, and attaching them to a single image. He seeks in vain for a prototype of his conception. Blasted by his disappointment, he descends to an untimely grave.

The picture is not barren of instruction to actual men. The Poet's self-centred seclusion was avenged by the furies of an irresistible passion pursuing him to speedy ruin. But that Power which strikes the luminaries of the world with sudden darkness and extinction, by awakening them to too exquisite a perception of its influences, dooms to a slow and poisonous decay those meaner spirits that dare to abjure its dominion. Their destiny is more abject and inglorious as their delinquency is more contemptible and pernicious. They who, deluded by no generous error, instigated by no sacred thirst of doubtful knowledge, duped by no illustrious superstition, loving nothing on this earth, and cherishing no hopes beyond, yet keep aloof from sympathies with their kind, rejoicing neither in human joy nor mourning with human grief; these, and such as they, have their apportioned curse. They languish, because none feel with them their common nature. They are morally dead. They are neither friends, nor lovers, nor fathers, nor citizens of the world, nor benefactors of their country. Among those who attempt to exist without human sympathy, the pure and tender-hearted perish through the intensity and passion of their search after its communities, when the vacancy of their spirit suddenly makes itself felt. All else, selfish, blind, and torpid, are those unforeseeing multitudes who constitute, together with their own, the lasting misery and loneliness of the world. Those who love not their fellow-beings, live unfruitful lives, and prepare for their old age a miserable grave.

The good die first,
And those whose hearts are dry as summer dust,
Burn to the socket! ¹

The Fragment entitled "The Daemon of the World" is a detached part of a poem which the author does not intend for publication.² The metre in which it is composed is that of Samson Agonistes and the Italian pastoral drama, and may be considered as the natural measure into which poetical conceptions, expressed in harmonious language, necessarily fall.

December 14, 1815.

¹ See The Excursion, by Wordsworth, book i.—Ed.
² Queen Mab, from which certain parts were extracted, rewritten, and renamed, had not been published in 1815, but only printed for private circulation.—Ed.
ALASTOR;¹

or,

THE SPIRIT OF SOLITUDE.

Nondum amabam, et amare amabam, quærebam quid amarem, amans amare.—Confess. St. August.

Earth, ocean, air, belovèd brotherhood!
If our great Mother has imbued my soul
With aught of natural piety to feel
Your love, and recompense the boon with mine;
If dewy morn, and odorous noon, and even,
With sunset and its gorgeous ministers,
And solemn midnight’s tingling silentness;
If autumn’s hollow sighs in the sere wood,
And winter robing with pure snow and crowns

¹ The title of the poem is derived from the Greek word ἀλαστὼρ, an evil genius. The spirit of solitude is an obviously fatal spirit in the development of the fable. My dear friend the late William Bell Scott was not alone in misconceiving the application of the title. From the opening of his poem To the Memory of Percy Bysshe Shelley—

Where is Alastor gone,—
The fairy queen’s own latest born, Where is he gone?—

it is evident that he regarded “Alastor” as the name of the poet whose story is told, and not as the name of the misleading spirit of solitude.—Ed.
Of starry ice the grey grass and bare boughs; 10
If spring's voluptuous pantings when she breathes
Her first sweet kisses, have been dear to me;
If no bright bird, insect, or gentle beast
I consciously have injured, but still loved
And cherished these my kindred; then forgive
This boast, belovèd brethren, and withdraw
No portion of your wonted favour now!

Mother of this unfathomable world!
Favour my solemn song, for I have loved Thee ever, and thee only; I have watched 20
Thy shadow, and the darkness of thy steps,
And my heart ever gazes on the depth
Of thy deep mysteries. I have made my bed
In charnels and on coffins, where black death
Keeps record of the trophies won from thee,
Hoping to still these obstinate questionings
Of thee and thine, by forcing some lone ghost,
Thy messenger, to render up the tale
Of what we are. In lone and silent hours,
When night makes a weird sound of its own stillness,
Like an inspired and desperate alchymist
Staking his very life on some dark hope,
Have I mixed awful talk and asking looks
With my most innocent love, until strange tears
Uniting with those breathless kisses, made Such magie as compels the charmed night
To render up thy charge: ... and, though ne'er yet
Thou hast unveiled thy inmost sanctuary,
Enough from incommunicable dream,
And twilight phantasms, and deep noonday thought,
Has shone within me, that serenely now
And moveless, as a long-forgotten lyre
Suspended in the solitary dome
Of some mysterious and deserted fane,
I wait thy breath, Great Parent, that my strain
May modulate with murmurs of the air,
And motions of the forests and the sea,
And voice of living beings, and woven hymns
Of night and day, and the deep heart of man.

There was a Poet whose untimely tomb
No human hands with pious reverence reared,
But the charmed eddies of autumnal winds
Built o'er his mouldering bones a pyramid
Of mouldering leaves in the waste wilderness:—
A lovely youth,—no mourning maiden decked
With weeping flowers, or votive cypress wreath,

This collocation of words is at least remarkable. Two years before Shelley was born, namely in the year 1790, appeared the finest of the prophetic books of William Blake, The Marriage of Heaven and Hell. At page 26 occurs the phrase “leading his starry hosts thro’ the waste wilderness”; and on the same page is the intransitive verb ruining, the employment of which by Shelley in Alastor (page 154) has led to so much discussion. At page 18 is the passage “beneath us at an immense distance was the sun, black but shining round it were fiery tracks,” &c., which recalls the lines in Queen Mab (see ante, page 12), ending with

The sun’s unclouded orb
Rolled through the black concave;

and at page 27 Blake uses the expression “beamy eyelids,” while Shelley (Dæmon of the World, pages 196-7) has “beamy eyes” and “veiny eyelids.” I have elsewhere pointed out the striking similarity between a passage in Shelley’s Defence of Poetry and one in The Marriage of Heaven and Hell. More striking still is the fact that in the same book, at page 15, Blake has reduced to pictorial form the vision of an eagle struggling in the air with a snake,—a vision
The lone couch of his everlasting sleep:—
Gentle, and brave, and generous,—no lorn bard
Breathed o'er his dark fate one melodious sigh:
He lived, he died, he sung, in solitude.

Strangers have wept to hear his passionate notes,
And virgins, as unknown he passed, have pined
And wasted for fond love of his wild eyes.
The fire of those soft orbs has ceased to burn,
And Silence, too enamoured of that voice,
Locks its mute music in her rugged cell.

By solemn vision, and bright silver dream,
His infancy was nurtured. Every sight
And sound from the vast earth and ambient air,
Sent to his heart its choicest impulses.
The fountains of divine philosophy
Fled not his thirsting lips, and all of great,
Or good, or lovely, which the sacred past
In truth or fable consecrates, he felt
And knew. When early youth had passed, he left His cold fireside and alienated home
To seek strange truths in undiscovered lands.
Many a wide waste and tangled wilderness
Has lured his fearless steps; and he has bought With his sweet voice and eyes, from savage men,
His rest and food. Nature's most secret steps
He like her shadow has pursued, where'er
The red volcano overcanopies
Its fields of snow and pinnacles of ice
With burning smoke, or where bitumen lakes
On black bare pointed islets ever beat which haunts Shelley's poetry somewhat persistently (see lines 227 and 325 of the present poem, and above all Canto I of Laon and Cythna). It would be curious if after all Blake's majestic design had been seen by Shelley and had remained permanently fixed in his imagination.—Ed.

With sluggish surge, or where the secret caves
Rugged and dark, winding among the springs
Of fire and poison, inaccessible
To avarice or pride, their starry domes
Of diamond and of gold expand above
Numberless and immeasurable halls,
Frequent with crystal column, and clear shrines
Of pearl, and thrones radiant with chrysolite.
Nor had that scene of ampler majesty
Than gems or gold, the varying roof of heaven
And the green earth, lost in his heart its claims
To love and wonder; he would linger long
In lonesome vales, making the wild his home,
Until the doves and squirrels would partake
From his innocuous hand his bloodless food,
Lured by the gentle meaning of his looks,
And the wild antelope, that starts whene'er
The dry leaf rustles in the brake, suspend
Her timid steps to gaze upon a form
More graceful than her own.

His wandering step,
Obedient to high thoughts, has visited
The awful ruins of the days of old:
Athens, and Tyre, and Balbec, and the waste
Where stood Jerusalem, the fallen towers
Of Babylon, the eternal pyramids,
Memphis and Thebes, and whatsoe'er of strange Sculptured on alabaster obelisk,
Or jasper tomb, or mutilated sphynx,
Dark Æthiopia in her desert hills Conceals. Among the ruined temples there, Stupendous columns, and wild images
Of more than man, where marble dæmons watch
The Zodiac's brazen mystery, and dead men
Hang their mute thoughts on the mute walls around,

He lingered, poring on memorials.
Of the world's youth, through the long burning day
Gazed on those speechless shapes, nor, when the moon
Filled the mysterious halls with floating shades, Suspended he that task, but ever gazed
And gazed, till meaning on his vacant mind Flashed like strong inspiration, and he saw
The thrilling secrets of the birth of time.

Meanwhile an Arab maiden brought his food,
Her daily portion, from her father's tent,
And spread her matting for his couch, and stole
From duties and repose to tend his steps:—
Enamoured, yet not daring for deep awe
To speak her love:—and watched his nightly sleep, Sleepless herself, to gaze upon his lips
Parted in slumber, whence the regular breath
Of innocent dreams arose: then, when red morn
Made paler the pale moon, to her cold home
Wildered, and wan, and panting, she returned.

The Poet wandering on, through Arabia
And Persia, and the wild Carmanian waste,
And o'er the aërial mountains which pour down
Indus and Oxus from their icy caves,
In joy and exultation held his way;
Till in the vale of Cashmere, far within Its loneliest dell, where odorous plants entwine
Beneath the hollow rocks a natural bower, Beside a sparkling rivulet he stretched His languid limbs. A vision on his sleep
There came, a dream of hopes that never yet
Had flushed his cheek. He dreamed a veiled maid Sate near him, talking in low solemn tones.
Her voice was like the voice of his own soul
Heard in the calm of thought; its music long,
Like woven sounds of streams and breezes, held
His inmost sense suspended in its web
Of many-coloured woof and shifting hues.
Knowledge and truth and virtue were her theme,
And lofty hopes of divine liberty,
Thoughts the most dear to him, and poesy,
Herself a poet. Soon the solemn mood
Of her pure mind kindled through all her frame
A permeating fire: wild numbers then
She raised, with voice stifled in tremulous sobs Subdued by its own pathos: her fair hands
Were bare alone, sweeping from some strange harp
Strange symphony, and in their branching veins
The eloquent blood told an ineffable tale.
The beating of her heart was heard to fill
The pauses of her music, and her breath
Tumultuously accorded with those fits
Of intermitted song. Sudden she rose,
As if her heart impatiently endured
Its bursting burthen: at the sound he turned,
And saw by the warm light of their own life
Her glowing limbs beneath the sinuous veil
Of woven wind, her outspread arms now bare,
Her dark locks floating in the breath of night,
Her beamy bending eyes, her parted lips
Outstretched, and pale, and quivering eagerly.
His strong heart sunk and sickened with excess Of love. He reared his shuddering limbs and quelled
His gasping breath, and spread his arms to meet Her panting bosom: . . . she drew back a while,
Then, yielding to the irresistible joy,
With frantic gesture and short breathless cry
Folded his frame in her dissolving arms.
Now blackness veiled his dizzy eyes, and night
Involved and swallowed up the vision; sleep,
Like a dark flood suspended in its course, 190
Rolled back its impulse on his vacant brain.

Roused by the shock he started from his trance—
The cold white light of morning, the blue moon
Low in the west, the clear and garish hills,
The distinct valley and the vacant woods,
Spread round him where he stood. Whither have fled
The hues of heaven that canopied his bower
Of yesternight? The sounds that soothed his sleep,
The mystery and the majesty of Earth,
The joy, the exultation? His wan eyes 200
Gaze on the empty scene as vacantly
As ocean's moon looks on the moon in heaven.
The spirit of sweet human love has sent
A vision to the sleep of him who spurned
Her choicest gifts. He eagerly pursues
Beyond the realms of dream that fleeting shade;
He overleaps the bounds. Alas! alas!
Were limbs, and breath, and being intertwined
Thus treacherously? Lost, lost, for ever lost,
In the wide pathless desert of dim sleep, 210
That beautiful shape! Does the dark gate of death Conduct to thy mysterious paradise,
O Sleep? Does the bright arch of rainbow clouds,
And pendent mountains seen in the calm lake,
Lead only to a black and watery depth,
While death's blue vault, with loathliest vapours hung,
Where every shade which the foul grave exhales
Hides its dead eye from the detested day,
Conduct, O Sleep, to thy delightful realms?
This doubt with sudden tide flowed on his heart,
The insatiate hope which it awakened stung
His brain even like despair.

While day-light held
The sky, the Poet kept mute conference
With his still soul. At night the passion came,
Like the fierce fiend of a distempered dream,
And shook him from his rest, and led him forth
Into the darkness.—As an eagle grasped
In folds of the green serpent, feels her breast Burn with the poison, and precipitates
Through night and day, tempest, and calm, and cloud, Frantic with dizzying anguish, her blind flight
O’er the wide aëry wilderness: thus driven
By the bright shadow of that lovely dream,
Beneath the cold glare of the desolate night,
Through tangled swamps and deep precipitous dells,
Startling with careless step the moon-light snake,
He fled. Red morning dawned upon his flight,
Shedding the mockery of its vital hues Upon his cheek of death. He wandered on Till vast Aornos seen from Petra’s steep Hung o’er the low horizon like a cloud;
Through Balk, and where the desolated tombs
Of Parthian kings scatter to every wind
Their wasting dust, wildly he wandered on,
Day after day, a weary waste of hours,
Bearing within his life the brooding care

1 Though the construction here is lax, the passage is probably as the poet meant it to be.—Ed.
That ever fed on its decaying flame.
And now his limbs were lean; his scattered hair
Sered by the autumn of strange suffering
Sung dirges in the wind; his listless hand hung Hung like dead bone within its withered skin;
Life, and the lustre that consumed it, shone
As in a furnace burning secretly
From his dark eyes alone. The cottagers,
Who ministered with human charity
His human wants, beheld with wondering awe
Their fleeting visitant. The mountaineer, Encountering on some dizzy precipice
That spectral form, deemed that the Spirit of wind
With lightning eyes, and eager breath, and feet Disturbing not the drifted snow, had paused
In its career: the infant would conceal
His troubled visage in his mother’s robe
In terror at the glare of those wild eyes,
To remember their strange light in many a dream
Of after-times; but youthful maidens, taught
By nature, would interpret half the woe
That wasted him, would call him with false names
Brother, and friend, would press his pallid hand
At parting, and watch, dim through tears, the path
Of his departure from their father’s door.

At length upon the lone Chorasmian shore
He paused, a wide and melancholy waste
Of putrid marshes. A strong impulse urged
His steps to the sea-shore. A swan was there, Beside a sluggish stream among the reeds.
It rose as he approached, and with strong wings
Scaling the upward sky, bent its bright course High over the immeasurable main.
His eyes pursued its flight.—"Thou hast a home,
Beautiful bird; thou voyagest to thine home,
Where thy sweet mate will twine her downy neck
With thine, and welcome thy return with eyes
Bright in the lustre of their own fond joy.
And what am I that I should linger here,
With voice far sweeter than thy dying notes,
Spirit more vast than thine, frame more attuned
To beauty, wasting these surpassing powers
In the deaf air, to the blind earth, and heaven That echoes not my thoughts?" A gloomy smile
Of desperate hope wrinkled his quivering lips.
For sleep, he knew, kept most relentlessly
Its precious charge, and silent death exposed,
Faithless perhaps as sleep, a shadowy lure,
With doubtful smile mocking its own strange charms.

Startled by his own thoughts he looked around.
There was no fair fiend near him, not a sight
Or sound of awe but in his own deep mind.
A little shallop floating near the shore
Caught the impatient wandering of his gaze.
It had been long abandoned, for its sides Gaped wide with many a rift, and its frail joints
Swayed with the undulations of the tide.
A restless impulse urged him to embark And meet lone Death on the drear ocean's waste;
For well he knew that mighty Shadow loves
The slimy caverns of the populous deep.
The day was fair and sunny, sea and sky
Drank its inspiring radiance, and the wind Swept strongly from the shore, blackening the waves.
Following his eager soul, the wanderer
Leaped in the boat, he spread his cloak aloft
On the bare mast, and took his lonely seat,
And felt the boat speed o'er the tranquil sea
Like a torn cloud before the hurricane.

As one that in a silver vision floats
Obedient to the sweep of odorous winds
Upon resplendent clouds, so rapidly
Along the dark and ruffled waters fled
The straining boat.—A whirlwind swept it on,
With fierce gusts and precipitating force,
Through the white ridges of the chafèd sea.
The waves arose. Higher and higher still Their fierce necks writhed beneath the tempest's scourge Like serpents struggling in a vulture's grasp.
Calm and rejoicing in the fearful war
Of wave ruining on wave, and blast on blast Descending, and black flood on whirlpool driven
With dark obliterating course, he sate:
As if their genii were the ministers
Appointed to conduct him to the light
Of those belovèd eyes, the Poet sate Holding the steady helm. Evening came on,
The beams of sunset hung their rainbow hues
High 'mid the shifting domes of sheeted spray
That canopied his path o'er the waste deep;
Twilight, ascending slowly from the east,
Entwined in duskier wreaths her braided locks
O'er the fair front and radiant eyes of day;
Night followed, clad with stars. On every side
More horribly the multitudinous streams
Of ocean's mountainous waste to mutual war
Rushed in dark tumult thundering, as to mock
The calm and spangled sky. The little boat Still fled before the storm; still fled, like foam
Down the steep cataract of a wintry river;
Now pausing on the edge of the riven wave;
Now leaving far behind the bursting mass
That fell, convulsing ocean. Safely fled—
As if that frail and wasted human form, 350
Had been an elemental god.

At midnight
The moon arose: and lo! the ætherial cliffs
Of Caucasus, whose icy summits shone
Among the stars like sunlight, and around Whose caverned base the whirlpools and the waves
Bursting and eddying irresistibly
Rage and resound for ever.—Who shall save?—
The boat fled on,—the boiling torrent drove,—
The crags closed round with black and jagged arms,
The shattered mountain overhung the sea, 360
And faster still, beyond all human speed,
Suspended on the sweep of the smooth wave,
The little boat was driven. A cavern there Yawned, and amid its slant and winding depths Ingulphed the rushing sea. The boat fled on With unrelaxing speed.—"Vision and Love!"
The Poet cried aloud, "I have beheld
The path of thy departure. Sleep and death Shall not divide us long!" The boat pursued
The windings of the cavern. Day-light shone
At length upon that gloomy river's flow; 371
Now, where the fiercest war among the waves
Is calm, on the unfathomable stream
The boat moved slowly. Where the mountain, riven, Exposed those black depths to the azure sky,
Ere yet the flood's enormous volume fell Even to the base of Caucasus, with sound
That shook the everlasting rocks, the mass
Filled with one whirlpool all that ample chasm;
Stair above stair the eddying waters rose Circling immeasurably fast, and laved
With alternating dash the knarled roots
Of mighty trees, that stretched their giant arms
In darkness over it. 'T' the midst was left,
Reflecting, yet distorting every cloud,
A pool of treacherous and tremendous calm.
Seized by the sway of the ascending stream,
With dizzy swiftness, round, and round, and round,
Ridge after ridge the straining boat arose,
Till on the verge of the extremest curve,
Where through an opening of the rocky bank,
The waters overflow, and a smooth spot
Of glassy quiet 'mid those battling tides
Is left, the boat paused shuddering.—Shall it sink Down the abyss? Shall the reverting stress
Of that resistless gulph embosom it?
Now shall it fall?—A wandering stream of wind,
Breathed from the west, has caught the expanded sail,
And, lo! with gentle motion, between banks
Of mossy slope, and on a placid stream,
Beneath a woven grove it sails, and, hark!
The ghastly torrent mingles its far roar,
With the breeze murmuring in the musical woods.
Where the embowering trees recede, and leave
A little space of green expanse, the cove
Is closed by meeting banks, whose yellow flowers
For ever gaze on their own drooping eyes, Reflected in the crystal calm. The wave
Of the boat's motion marred their pensive task,
Which nought but vagrant bird, or wanton wind,
Or falling spear-grass, or their own decay
Had e'er disturbed before. The Poet longed
To deck with their bright hues his withered hair,
But on his heart its solitude returned,
And he forbore. Not the strong impulse hid
In those flushed cheeks, bent eyes, and shadowy frame
Had yet performed its ministry: it hung
Upon his life, as lightning in a cloud
Gleams, hovering ere it vanish, ere the floods
Of night close over it.

The noonday sun

Now shone upon the forest, one vast mass
Of mingling shade, whose brown magnificence
A narrow vale embosoms. There, huge caves,
Scooped in the dark base of their aéry rocks
Mocking its moans, respond and roar for ever.
The meeting boughs and implicated leaves Wove twilight o'er the Poet's path, as led By love, or dream, or god, or mightier Death,
He sought in Nature's dearest haunt, some bank,
Her cradle, and his sepulchre. More dark
And dark the shades accumulate. The oak,
Expanding its immense and knotty arms,
Embraces the light beech. The pyramids
Of the tall cedar overarch, frame
Most solemn domes within, and far below,
Like clouds suspended in an emerald sky,
The ash and the acacia floating hang Tremulous and pale. Like restless serpents, clothed
In rainbow and in fire, the parasites,
Starred with ten thousand blossoms, flow around
The grey trunks, and, as gamesome infants' eyes,
With gentle meanings, and most innocent wiles,
Fold their beams round the hearts of those that love,
These twine their tendrils with the wedded boughs
Uniting their close union; the woven leaves
Make net-work of the dark blue light of day,
And the night's noontide clearness, mutable
As shapes in the weird clouds. Soft mossy lawns Beneath these canopies extend their swells,
Fragrant with perfumed herbs, and eyed with blooms Minute yet beautiful. One darkest glen Sends from its woods of musk-rose, twined with jasmine, A soul-dissolving odour, to invite
To some more lovely mystery. Through the dell, Silence and Twilight here, twin-sisters, keep Their noonday watch, and sail among the shades,
Like vaporous shapes half seen; beyond, a well,
Dark, gleaming, and of most translucent wave,
Images all the woven boughs above,
And each depending leaf, and every speck
Of azure sky, darting between their chasms;
Nor aught else in the liquid mirror laves
Its portraiture, but some inconstant star
Between one foliaged lattice twinkling fair,
Or, painted bird, sleeping beneath the moon,
Or gorgeous insect floating motionless,
Unconscious of the day, ere yet his wings,
Have spread their glories to the gaze of noon.

Hither the Poet came. His eyes beheld 469
Their own wan light through the reflected lines
Of his thin hair, distinct in the dark depth
Of that still fountain; as the human heart,
Gazing in dreams over the gloomy grave,
Sees its own treacherous likeness there. He heard
The motion of the leaves, the grass that sprung Startled and glanced and trembled even to feel An unaccustomed presence, and the sound
Of the sweet brook that from the secret springs
Of that dark fountain rose. A Spirit seemed To stand beside him—clothed in no bright robes
Of shadowy silver or enshrining light,
Borrowed from aught the visible world affords
Of grace, or majesty, or mystery;—
But, undulating woods, and silent well,
And leaping rivulet, and evening gloom
Now deepening the dark shades, for speech assuming,
Held commune with him,¹ as if he and it
Were all that was,—only . . . when his regard
Was raised by intense pensiveness, . . . two eyes,
Two starry eyes, hung in the gloom of thought,
And seemed with their serene and azure smiles

¹ The spirit, assuming for speech the undulating woods, silent well, leaping rivulet, and evening gloom, communed with the poet: at least I presume that to be the meaning of this somewhat involved passage.—Ed.
To beckon him.

Obedient to the light
That shone within his soul, he went, pursuing
The windings of the dell.—The rivulet
Wanton and wild, through many a green ravine Beneath the forest flowed. Sometimes it fell Among the moss with hollow harmony
Dark and profound. Now on the polished stones
It danced; like childhood laughing as it went:
Then, through the plain in tranquil wanderings crept, Reflecting every herb and drooping bud
That overhung its quietness.—"O stream!
Whose source is inaccessibly profound,
Whither do thy mysterious waters tend?
Thou imagest my life. Thy darksome stillness,
Thy dazzling waves, thy loud and hollow gulphs,
Thy searchless fountain, and invisible course
Have each their type in me: and the wide sky,
And measureless ocean may declare as soon
What oozy cavern or what wandering cloud
Contains thy waters, as the universe
Tell where these living thoughts reside, when stretched Upon thy flowers my bloodless limbs shall waste
I' the passing wind!"

Beside the grassy shore
Of the small stream he went; he did impress
On the green moss his tremulous step, that caught Strong shuddering from his burning limbs.
As one
Roused by some joyous madness from the couch
Of fever, he did move; yet, not like him,
Forgetful of the grave, where, when the flame
Of his frail exultation shall be spent,
He must descend. With rapid steps he went Beneath the shade of trees, beside the flow
Of the wild babbling rivulet; and now
The forest's solemn canopies were changed
For the uniform and lightsome evening sky.
Grey rocks did peep from the spare moss, and stemmed
The struggling brook: tall spires of windlestrae Threw their thin shadows down the rugged slope,
And naught but knarled roots of ancient pines, Branchless and blasted, clenched with grasping roots
The unwilling soil. A gradual change was here, Yet ghastly. For, as fast years flow away,
The smooth brow gathers, and the hair grows thin
And white, and where irradiate dewy eyes
Had shone, gleam stony orbs:—so from his steps Bright flowers departed, and the beautiful shade
Of the green groves, with all their odorous winds
And musical motions. Calm, he still pursued
The stream, that with a larger volume now Rollled through the labyrinthine dell; and there Fretted a path through its descending curves
With its wintry speed. On every side now rose Rocks, which, in unimaginable forms,
Lifted their black and barren pinnacles
In the light of evening, and its precipice

1 This obscure passage is left precisely as Shelley left it. The substitution of amidst precipices for and Obscuring the ravine, disclosed above,
'Mid toppling stones, black gulphs and yawning caves,
Whose windings gave ten thousand various tongues
To the loud stream. Lo! where the pass expands
Its stony jaws, the abrupt mountain breaks,
And seems, with its accumulated crags,
To overhang the world: for wide expand
Beneath the wan stars and descending moon
Islanded seas, blue mountains, mighty streams,
Dim tracts and vast, robed in the lustrous gloom
Of leaden-coloured even, and fiery hills Mingling their flames with twilight, on the verge
Of the remote horizon. The near scene,
In naked and severe simplicity,
Made contrast with the universe. A pine,
Rock-rooted, stretched athwart the vacancy
Its swinging boughs, to each inconstant blast
Yielding one only response, at each pause
In most familiar cadence, with the howl,
The thunder and the hiss of homeless streams Mingling its solemn song, whilst the broad river,
Foaming and hurrying o'er its rugged path,
Fell into that immeasurable void
Scattering its waters to the passing winds.

Yet the grey precipice and solemn pine,
And torrent, were not all;—one silent nook its precipice would leave a tolerably clear sense, but would rest upon conjecture alone. Though to my mind preferable to any other emendation which has been made or offered, my own is too radical for adoption without authority.—Ed.
Was there. Even on the edge of that vast mountain, Upheld by knotty roots and fallen rocks,
It overlooked in its serenity
The dark earth, and the bending vault of stars.
It was a tranquil spot, that seemed to smile
Even in the lap of horror. Ivy clasped
The fissured stones with its entwining arms,
And did embower with leaves for ever green,
And berries dark, the smooth and even space
Of its inviolated floor, and here
The children of the autumnal whirlwind bore,
In wanton sport, those bright leaves, whose decay,
Red, yellow, or ætherially pale,
Rivals the pride of summer. 'Tis the haunt
Of every gentle wind, whose breath can teach
The wilds to love tranquillity. One step,
One human step alone, has ever broken
The stillness of its solitude:—one voice
Alone inspired its echoes,—even that voice
Which hither came, floating among the winds,
And led the loveliest among human forms
To make their wild haunts the depository
Of all the grace and beauty that endued
Its motions, render up its majesty,
Scatter its music on the unfeeling storm,
And to the damp leaves and blue cavern mould,
Nurses of rainbow flowers and branching moss,
Commit the colours of that varying cheek,
That snowy breast, those dark and drooping eyes.

The dim and hornèd moon hung low, and poured
A sea of lustre on the horizon's verge
That overflowed its mountains. Yellow mist Filled the unbounded atmosphere, and drank
Wan moonlight even to fulness: not a star Shone, not a sound was heard; the very winds, Danger's grim playmates, on that precipice
 Slept, clasped in his embrace.—O, storm of death!
Whose sightless speed divides this sullen night:
And thou, colossal Skeleton, that, still Guiding its irresistible career
In thy devastating omnipotence,
Art king of this frail world, from the red field
Of slaughter, from the reeking hospital,
The patriot's sacred couch, the snowy bed
Of innocence, the scaffold and the throne,
A mighty voice invokes thee. Ruin calls
His brother Death. A rare and regal prey
He hath prepared, prowling around the world;
Glutted with which thou mayst repose, and men
Go to their graves like flowers or creeping worms, Nor ever more offer at thy dark shrine
The unheeded tribute of a broken heart.

When on the threshold of the green recess
The wanderer's footsteps fell, he knew that death
Was on him. Yet a little, ere it fled,
Did he resign his high and holy soul
To images of the majestic past,
That paused within his passive being now,
Like winds that bear sweet music, when they breathe Through some dim latticed chamber. He did place
His pale lean hand upon the rugged trunk
Of the old pine. Upon an ivied stone
Reclined his languid head, his limbs did rest, Diffused and motionless, on the smooth brink
Of that obscurest chasm;—and thus he lay,
Surrendering to their final impulses
The hovering powers of life. Hope and despair,
The torturers, slept; no mortal pain or fear
Marred his repose, the influxes of sense,
And his own being unalloyed by pain,
Yet feeble and more feeble, calmly fed
The stream of thought, till he lay breathing there
At peace, and faintly smiling:—his last sight
Was the great moon, which o'er the western line
Of the wide world her mighty horn suspended,
With whose dun beams inwoven darkness seemed To mingle. Now upon the jagged hills
It rests, and still as the divided frame
Of the vast meteor sunk, the Poet's blood,
That ever beat in mystic sympathy
With nature's ebb and flow, grew feeble still:
And when two lessening points of light alone
Gleamed through the darkness, the alternate gasp
Of his faint respiration scarce did stir
The stagnate night:—till the minutest ray
Was quenched, the pulse yet lingered in his heart.
It paused—it fluttered. But when heaven remained Utterly black, the murky shades involved
An image, silent, cold, and motionless,
As their own voiceless earth and vacant air.
Even as a vapour fed with golden beams
That ministered on sunlight, ere the west
Eclipses it, was now that wondrous frame—
No sense, no motion, no divinity—
A fragile lute, on whose harmonious strings
The breath of heaven did wander—a bright stream
Once fed with many-voicèd waves—a dream
Of youth, which night and time have quenched for ever,
Still, dark, and dry, and unremembered now.

O, for Medea's wondrous alchemy,
Which wheresoe'er it fell made the earth gleam
With bright flowers, and the wintry boughs exhale
From vernal blooms fresh fragrance! O, that God, Profuse of poisons, would concede the chalice
Which but one living man¹ has drained, who now, Vessel of deathless wrath, a slave that feels
No proud exemption in the blighting curse
He bears, over the world wanders for ever,
Lone as incarnate death! O, that the dream
Of dark magician in his visioned cave,
Raking the cinders of a crucible
For life and power, even when his feeble hand Shakes in its last decay, were the true law
Of this so lovely world! But thou art fled Like some frail exhalation; which the dawn
Robes in its golden beams,—ah! thou hast fled!
The brave, the gentle, and the beautiful,
The child of grace and genius. Heartless things

¹ The Wandering Jew was the subject of a composition in verse by Medwin and Shelley, written when Shelley was about fifteen years old, and as yet undiscovered so far as most of Shelley's portion is concerned. Ahasuerus is next conspicuous in Queen Mab, and was finally reintroduced into Shelley's last published work, Hellas.—Ed.
Are done and said i' the world, and many worms
And beasts and men live on, and mighty Earth
From sea and mountain, city and wilderness,
In vesper low or joyous orison,
Lifts still its solemn voice:—but thou art fled—
Thou canst no longer know or love the shapes
Of this phantasmal scene, who have to thee
Been purest ministers, who are, alas!
Now thou art not. Upon those pallid lips
So sweet even in their silence, on those eyes
That image sleep in death, upon that form
Yet safe from the worm's outrage, let no tear Be shed—not even in thought. Nor, when those hues
Are gone, and those divinest lineaments,
Worn by the senseless wind, shall live alone
In the frail pauses of this simple strain,
Let not high verse, mourning the memory
Of that which is no more, or painting's woe
Or sculpture, speak in feeble imagery
Their own cold powers. Art and eloquence,
And all the shows o' the world are frail and vain
To weep a loss that turns their lights to shade.
It is a woe too 'deep for tears,' when all
Is reft at once, when some surpassing Spirit,
Whose light adorned the world around it, leaves
Those who remain behind, not sobs or groans,
The passionate tumult of a clinging hope;
But pale despair and cold tranquillity.
Nature's vast frame, the web of human things,
Birth and the grave, that are not as they were.
O! there are spirits of the air,
And genii of the evening breeze,
And gentle ghosts, with eyes as fair
As star-beams among twilight trees:—
Such lovely ministers to meet
Oft hast thou turned from men thy lonely feet.

With mountain winds, and babbling springs,
And moonlight seas, that are the voice
Of these inexplicable things,
Thou didst hold commune, and rejoice
When they did answer thee; but they Cast, like a worthless boon, thy love away.

And thou hast sought in starry eyes
Beams that were never meant for thine,
Another's wealth:—tame sacrifice
To a fond faith! still dost thou pine?
Still dost thou hope that greeting hands,
Voice, looks, or lips, may answer thy demands?

Ah! wherefore didst thou build thine hope
On the false earth's inconstancy?
Did thine own mind afford no scope
Of love, or moving thoughts to thee?
That natural scenes or human smiles
Could steal the power to wind thee in their wiles.

Yes, all the faithless smiles are fled Whose falsehood left thee broken-hearted;
The glory of the moon is dead;
Night's ghosts and dreams have now departed;
Thine own soul still is true to thee,
But changed to a foul fiend through misery. 30

This fiend, whose ghastly presence ever
Beside thee like thy shadow hangs,
Dream not to chase;—the mad endeavour
Would scourge thee to severer pangs.
Be as thou art. Thy settled fate,
Dark as it is, all change would aggravate.

STANZAS.—April, 1814.

Away! the moor is dark beneath the moon,
Rapid clouds have drank the last pale beam of even:
Away! the gathering winds will call the darkness soon,
And profoundest midnight shroud the serene lights of heaven.

Pause not! The time is past! Every voice cries, Away!
Tempt not with one last tear thy friend's ungentle mood:
Thy lover's eye, so glazed and cold, dares not entreat thy stay:
Duty and dereliction guide thee back to solitude.

Away, away! to thy sad and silent home;
Pour bitter tears on its desolated hearth; 10
Watch the dim shades as like ghosts they go and come,
And complicate strange webs of melancholy mirth.
The leaves of wasted autumn woods shall float around thine head:
The blooms of dewy spring shall gleam beneath thy feet:
But thy soul or this world must fade in the frost that binds the dead, Ere midnight’s frown and morning’s smile, er thou and peace may meet.

The cloud shadows of midnight possess their own repose,
For the weary winds are silent, or the moon is in the deep:
Some respite to its turbulence unresting ocean knows;
Whatever moves, or toils, or grieves, hath its appointed sleep.

Thou in the grave shalt rest—yet till the phantoms flee
Which that house and heath and garden made dear to thee crewhile, Thy remembrance, and repentance, and deep musings are not free
From the music of two voices and the light of one sweet smile.

MUTABILITY.

We are as clouds that veil the midnight moon;
How restlessly they speed, and gleam, and quiver,
Streaking the darkness radianty !—yet soon
Night closes round, and they are lost for ever:
Or like forgotten lyres, whose dissonant strings
Give various response to each varying blast,
To whose frail frame no second motion brings
One mood or modulation like the last.

We rest.—A dream has power to poison sleep;
We rise.—One wandering thought pollutes
the day;
We feel, conceive or reason, laugh or weep;
Embrace fond woe, or cast our cares away:

It is the same!—For, be it joy or sorrow,
The path of its departure still is free:
Man's yesterday may ne'er be like his morrow;
Naught may endure but Mutability.

There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, Nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

Ecclesiastes.

The pale, the cold, and the moony smile
Which the meteor beam of a starless night
Sheds on a lonely and sea-girt isle,
Ere the dawning of morn's undoubted light,
Is the flame of life so fickle and wan That flits round our steps till their strength is gone.

O man! hold thee on in courage of soul
Through the stormy shades of thy worldly way,
And the billows of cloud that around thee roll
Shall sleep in the light of a wondrous day,
Where hell and heaven shall leave thee free
To the universe of destiny.
This world is the nurse of all we know,
This world is the mother of all we feel,
And the coming of death is a fearful blow
To a brain unencompassed with nerves of steel;
When all that we know, or feel, or see,
Shall pass like an unreal mystery.

The secret things of the grave are there,
Where all but this frame must surely be,
Though the fine-wrought eye and the wondrous ear
No longer will live to hear or to see
All that is great and all that is strange
In the boundless realm of unending change.

Who telleth a tale of unspeaking death?
Who lifteth the veil of what is to come?
Who painteth the shadows that are beneath
The wide-winding caves of the peopled tomb?
Or uniteth the hopes of what shall be
With the fears and the love for that which we see?

A SUMMER-EVENING CHURCH-YARD,

Lechlade, Gloucestershire.

The wind has swept from the wide atmosphere
Each vapour that obscured the sunset's ray;
And pallid evening twines its beaming hair
In duskier braids around the languid eyes of day:
Silence and twilight, unbeknown to men,
Creep hand in hand from yon obscurest glen.
They breathe their spells towards the departing day,
  Encompassing the earth, air, stars, and sea;
Light, sound, and motion own the potent sway,
  Responding to the charm with its own mystery.
The winds are still, or the dry church-tower grass
Knows not their gentle motions as they pass.

Thou too, aërial Pile! whose pinnacles
  Point from one shrine like pyramids of fire,
Obeyest in silence their sweet solemn spells,
  Clothing in hues of heaven thy dim and distant spire,
Around whose lessening and invisible height
Gather among the stars the clouds of night.

The dead are sleeping in their sepulchres:
  And, mouldering as they sleep, a thrilling sound
Half sense, half thought, among the darkness stirs, Breathed from their wormy beds all living things around,
And mingling with the still night and mute sky
Its awful hush is felt inaudibly.

Thus solemnized and softened, death is mild
  And terrorless as this serenest night:
Here could I hope, like some enquiring child
  Sporting on graves, that death did hide from human sight
Sweet secrets, or beside its breathless sleep
That loveliest dreams perpetual watch did keep.
TO WORDSWORTH.

Poet of Nature, thou hast wept to know
That things depart which never may return:
Childhood and youth, friendship and love’s first glow,
Have fled like sweet dreams, leaving thee to mourn.
These common woes I feel. One loss is mine
Which thou too feel’st, yet I alone deplore.
Thou wert as a lone star, whose light did shine
On some frail bark in winter’s midnight roar:
Thou hast like to a rock-built refuge stood
Above the blind and battling multitude:
In honoured poverty thy voice did weave Songs consecrate to truth and liberty,— Deserting these, thou leavest me to grieve, Thus having been, that thou shouldst cease to be.

FEELINGS OF A REPUBLICAN

ON THE FALL OF BONAPARTE.

I hated thee, fallen tyrant! I did groan
To think that a most unambitious slave, Like thou, shouldst dance and revel on the grave
Of Liberty. Thou mightst have built thy throne
Where it had stood even now: thou didst prefer A frail and bloody pomp which time has swept
In fragments towards oblivion. Massacre,
    For this I prayed, would on thy sleep have crept, Treason and Slavery, Rapine, Fear, and Lust,
    And stifled thee, their minister. I know
Too late, since thou and France are in the dust,
    That virtue owns a more eternal foe
Than force or fraud: old Custom, legal Crime,
And bloody Faith the foulest birth of time.¹

SONNET.

FROM THE ITALIAN OF DANTE.

_Dante Alighieri to Guido Cavalcanti._²

Guido, I would that Lappo, thou, and I,
    Led by some strong enchantment, might ascend

¹ Presumably by way of comment on this last line, Shelley printed next to it in the _Alastor_ volume, under the title _Superstition_, an excerpt from his privately printed poem _Queen Mab_. He simply took the thirty-one lines beginning with—Thou taintest all thou lookest upon!
and ending with—
    And all their causes, to an abstract point,
Converging, thou didst bend and called it God!
(pages 47 and 48 of this volume) and substituted for the last line the two following—Converging, thou didst give it name, and form, Intelligence, and unity, and power.—Ed.

² A translation of Cavalcanti’s Sonnet to Dante, beginning—Ik vegno il giorno a te infinite volte, will be found among Shelley’s translations in a later volume.—Ed.
A magic ship, whose charmèd sails should fly
   With winds at will where'er our thoughts
And that no change, nor any evil chance Should mar our joyous voyage; but it might That even satiety should still enhance Between our hearts their strict community:
And that the bounteous wizard then would place
Vanna and Bice and my^1 gentle love,
Companions of our wandering, and would grace
   With passionate talk, wherever we might rove,
Our time, and each were as content and free
As I believe that thou and I should be.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GREEK OF MOSCHUS.

Τὰν ἄλα τὰν γλαυκάν ὅταν ὄνεμος ἀτέρμα βάλλῃ, κ.τ.λ.

When winds that move not its calm surface sweep
The azure sea, I love the land no more;
The smiles of the serene and tranquil deep Tempt my unquiet mind.—But when the roar
Of ocean's grey abyss resounds, and foam
   Gathers upon the sea, and vast waves burst,
I turn from the drear aspect to the home
Of earth and its deep woods, where interspersed,
When winds blow loud, pines make sweet melody.

^1 Whether by mistranslation or by misprint, the word my is obviously wrong, Bice being herself the love of Dante.—ED.
Whose house is some lone bark, whose toil the sea,
Whose prey the wandering fish, an evil lot
Has chosen.—But I my languid limbs will fling
Beneath the plane, where the brook’s murmuring Moves the calm spirit, but disturbs it not.

THE DÆMON OF THE WORLD.¹

PART I.

Nec tantum prodere vati,
Quantum scire licet. Venit ætas omnis in unam Congeriem, miserumque premunt tot sæcula pectus.

LUCAN, Phars. L. v. l. 176.

How wonderful is Death,
Death and his brother Sleep!
One pale as yonder wan and hornèd moon,
With lips of lurid blue,
The other glowing like the vital morn,
When throned on ocean’s wave
It breathes over the world:
Yet both so passing strange and wonderful!

¹ This poem is an elaborate revision of the first, second, eighth and ninth cantos of Queen Mab, and may be regarded as what Shelley in 1815 considered worth preserving in that volume. After making his revision, which exists in his own copy of Queen Mab now in my collection, he only published with Alastor the first of the two parts. The second was published for the first time in my library edition of his works in 1877.—Ed.
Hath then the iron-sceptred Skeleton,
Whose reign is in the tainted sepulchres,
To the hell dogs that couch beneath his throne
Cast that fair prey? Must that divinest form,
Which love and admiration cannot view
Without a beating heart, whose azure veins
Steal like dark streams along a field of snow,
Whose outline is as fair as marble clothed
In light of some sublimest mind, decay?
Nor putrefaction's breath
Leave aught of this pure spectacle
But loathsomeness and ruin?—
Spare aught but a dark theme,
On which the lightest heart might moralize?
Or is it but that downy-wingèd slumbers
Have charmed their nurse coy Silence near her lids
To watch their own repose?
Will they, when morning's beam
Flows through those wells of light,
Seek far from noise and day some western cave,
Where woods and streams with soft and pausing winds
A lulling murmur weave?—

Ianthe doth not sleep
The dreamless sleep of death:
Nor in her moonlight chamber silently
Doth Henry hear her regular pulses throb,
Or mark her delicate cheek
With interchange of hues mock the broad moon, Outwatching weary night,
Without assured reward.
Her dewy eyes are closed;
On their translucent lids, whose texture fine Scarce hides the dark blue orbs that burn below
  With unapparent fire,
  The baby Sleep is pillowed:
  Her golden tresses shade
  The bosom’s stainless pride,
Twining like tendrils of the parasite
  Around a marble column.

Hark! whence that rushing sound?
'Tis like a wondrous strain that sweeps Around a lonely ruin
When west winds sigh and evening waves respond
  In whispers from the shore:
'Tis wilder than the unmeasured notes
Which from the unseen lyres of dells and groves
  The genii of the breezes sweep.
Floating on waves of music and of light,
The chariot of the Dæmon of the World
  Descends in silent power:
Its shape reposed within: slight as some cloud
That catches but the palest tinge of day
  When evening yields to night,
Bright as that fibrous woof when stars indue
  Its transitory robe.
Four shapeless shadows bright and beautiful
Draw that strange car of glory, reins of light, Check their unearthly speed; they stop and fold
  Their wings of braided air:
The Dæmon leaning from the ætherial car
  Gazed on the slumbering maid.
Human eye hath ne’er beheld
A shape so wild, so bright, so beautiful,
As that which o’er the maiden’s charmed sleep
Waving a starry wand,
Hung like a mist of light.
Such sounds as breathed around like odorous winds
Of wakening spring arose,
Filling the chamber and the moonlight sky.

Maiden, the world's supremest spirit
Beneath the shadow of her wings
Folds all thy memory doth inherit
From ruin of divinest things,
Feelings that lure thee to betray,
And light of thoughts that pass away.

For thou hast earned a mighty boon,
The truths which wisest poets see Dimly, thy mind may make its own,
Rewarding its own majesty,
Entranced in some diviner mood
Of self-oblvious solitude.

Custom, and Faith, and Power thou spurnest;
From hate and awe thy heart is free;
Ardent and pure as day thou burnest,
For dark and cold mortality
A living light, to cheer it long,
The watch-fires of the world among.

Therefore from nature's inner shrine,
Where gods and fiends in worship bend,
Majestic spirit, be it thine
The flame to seize, the veil to rend,
Where the vast snake Eternity
In charmèd sleep doth ever lie.
All that inspires thy voice of love,
   Or speaks in thy unclosing eyes,
Or through thy frame doth burn or move,
   Or think or feel, awake, arise!
   Spirit, leave for mine and me
   Earth’s unsubstantial mimicry!

It ceased, and from the mute and moveless frame
   A radiant spirit arose,
All beautiful in naked purity.
Robed in its human hues it did ascend,
Disparting as it went the silver clouds,
It moved towards the car, and took its seat
   Beside the Dæmon shape.

Obedient to the sweep of aëry song,
   The mighty ministers
Unfurled their prismatic wings.
   The magic car moved on;
The night was fair, innumerable stars
   Studded heaven’s dark blue vault;
The eastern wave grew pale
   With the first smile of morn.

   The magic car moved on.
   From the swift sweep of wings
The atmosphere in flaming sparkles flew;
   And where the burning wheels
Eddied above the mountain’s loftiest peak
   Was traced a line of lightning.
Now far above a rock the utmost verge
   Of the wide earth it flew,
The rival of the Andes, whose dark brow
   Frowned o’er the silver sea.
Far, far below the chariot's stormy path,
   Calm as a slumbering babe,
   Tremendous ocean lay.
Its broad and silent mirror gave to view
   The pale and waning stars,
   The chariot's fiery track,
   And the grey light of morn
   Tinging those fleecy clouds
That cradled in their folds the infant dawn.
The chariot seemed to fly
Through the abyss of an immense concave,
Radiant with million constellations, tinged
   With shades of infinite colour,
   And semicircled with a belt
   Flashing incessant meteors.

As they approached their goal,
The wingèd shadows seemed to gather speed.
The sea no longer was distinguished; earth
Appeared a vast and shadowy sphere, suspended
   In the black concave of heaven
   With the sun's cloudless orb,
   Whose rays of rapid light
Parted around the chariot's swifter course,
And fell like ocean's feathery spray
   Dashed from the boiling surge
   Before a vessel's prow.

The magic car moved on.
   Earth's distant orb appeared
The smallest light that twinkles in the heavens,
   Whilst round the chariot's way
Innumerable systems widely rolled,
   And countless spheres diffused
   An ever varying glory.
It was a sight of wonder! Some were horned,
And, like the moon's argentíne crescent hung
In the dark dome of heaven, some did shed A clear mild beam like Hesperus, while the sea Yet glows with fading sun-light; others dashed Athwart the night with trains of bickering fire, Like spherèd worlds to death and ruin driven; Some shone like stars, and as the chariot passed Bedimmed all other light.

Spirit of Nature! here
In this interminable wilderness
Of worlds, at whose involved immensity
Even soaring fancy staggers,
Here is thy fitting temple.
Yet not the lightest leaf
That quivers to the passing breeze
Is less instinct with thee,—
Yet not the meanest worm,
That lurks in graves and fattens on the dead,
Less shares thy eternal breath.
Spirit of Nature! thou
Imperishable as this glorious scene,
Here is thy fitting temple.

If solitude hath ever led thy steps
To the shore of the immeasurable sea,
And thou hast lingered there
Until the sun’s broad orb
Seemed resting on the fiery line of ocean,
Thou must have marked the braided webs of gold
That without motion hang Over the sinking sphere:
Thou must have marked the billowy mountain clouds, Edged with intolerable radiancy,
Towering like rocks of jet
Above the burning deep:
And yet there is a moment
When the sun's highest point
Peers like a star o'er ocean's western edge,
When those far clouds of feathery purple gleam
Like fairy lands girt by some heavenly sea:
Then has thy rapt imagination soared
Where in the midst of all existing things
The temple of the mightiest Dæmon stands.

Yet not the golden islands
That gleam amid you flood of purple light,
Nor the feathery curtains
That canopy the sun's resplendent couch,
Nor the burnished ocean waves
Paving that gorgeous dome,
So fair, so wonderful a sight
As the eternal temple could afford.
The elements of all that human thought
Can frame of lovely or sublime, did join
To rear the fabric of the fane, nor aught
Of earth may image forth its majesty.

Yet likest evening's vault that faéry hall,
As heaven low resting on the wave it spread
Its floors of flashing light,
Its vast and azure dome;
And on the verge of that obscure abyss
Where crystal battlements o'erhang the gulph
Of the dark world, ten thousand spheres diffuse
Their lustre through its adamantine gates.

The magic car no longer moved;
The Dæmon and the Spirit
Entered the eternal gates.
Those clouds of aëry gold
That slept in glittering billows
Beneath the azure canopy,
With the ætherial footsteps trembled not;
While slight and odorous mists
Floated to strains of thrilling melody
Through the vast columns and the pearly shrines.

The Dæmon and the Spirit
Approached the overhanging battlement,
Below lay stretched the boundless universe!
There, far as the remotest line
That limits swift imagination’s flight,
Unending orbs mingled in mazy motion,
Immutably fulfilling
Eternal Nature’s law.
Above, below, around,
The circling systems formed
A wilderness of harmony,
Each with undeviating aim
In eloquent silence through the depths of space
Pursued its wondrous way.—

Awhile the Spirit paused in ecstasy.
Yet soon she saw, as the vast spheres swept by,
Strange things within their belted orbs appear.
Like animated frenzies, dimly moved Shadows, and skeletons, and fiendly shapes, Thronging round human graves, and o’er the dead
Sculpturing records for each memory
In verse, such as malignant gods pronounce,
Blasting the hopes of men, when heaven and hell
Confounded burst in ruin o’er the world:
And they did build vast trophies, instruments
Of murder, human bones, barbaric gold,
Skins torn from living men, and towers of skulls
With sightless holes gazing on blinder heaven, Mitres, and crowns, and brazen chariots stained With blood, and scrolls of mystic wickedness, The sanguine codes of venerable crime. The likeness of a thronèd king came by, When these had passed, bearing upon his brow A threefold crown; his countenance was calm, His eye severe and cold; but his right hand Was charged with bloody coin, and he did gnaw By fits, with secret smiles, a human heart Concealed beneath his robe; and motley shapes, A multitudinous throng, around him knelt, With bosoms bare, and bowed heads, and false looks Of true submission, as the sphere rolled by. Brooking no eye to witness their foul shame, Which human hearts must feel, while human tongues Tremble to speak, they did rage horribly, Breathing in self contempt fierce blasphemies Against the Dæmon of the World, and high Hurling their armèd hands where the pure Spirit, Serene and inaccessibly secure, Stood on an isolated pinnacle, The flood of ages combating below, The depth of the unbounded universe Above, and all around Necessity’s unchanging harmony.

1 This phantasm of a king gnawing by fits a human heart which he keeps under his robe recalls forcibly the more powerful portrait of Murder with "a mask like Castlereagh," drawing human hearts from beneath his cloak, and throwing them to his bloodhounds. See the second and third stanzas of The Mask of Anarchy.—Ed.
PART II.

O happy Earth! reality of Heaven!
To which those restless powers that ceaselessly
Throng through the human universe aspire;
Thou consummation of all mortal hope!
Thou glorious prize of blindly-working will!
Whose rays, diffused throughout all space and time,
Verge to one point and blend forever there:
Of purest spirits thou pure dwelling-place!
Where care and sorrow, impotence and crime,
Languor, disease, and ignorance dare not come:
O happy Earth, reality of Heaven!

Genius has seen thee in her passionate dreams,
And dim forebodings of thy loveliness,
Haunting the human heart, have there entwined
Those rooted hopes, that the proud Power of Evil
Shall not forever on this fairest world
Shake pestilence and war, or that his slaves
With blasphemy for prayer, and human blood
For sacrifice, before his shrine forever
In adoration bend, or Erebus
With all its banded fiends shall not uprise
To overwhelm in envy and revenge
The dauntless and the good, who dare to hurl Defiance at his throne, girt tho' it be
With Death's omnipotence. Thou hast beheld
His empire, o'er the present and the past;
It was a desolate sight—now gaze on mine,
Futurity. Thou hoary giant Time,
Render thou up thy half-devoured babes,—
And from the cradles of eternity,
Where millions lie lulled to their portioned sleep
By the deep murmuring stream of passing things,
Tear thou that gloomy shroud.—Spirit, behold Thy glorious destiny!

The Spirit saw
The vast frame of the renovated world
Smile in the lap of Chaos, and the sense
Of hope thro' her fine texture did suffuse
Such varying glow, as summer evening casts
On undulating clouds and deepening lakes.
Like the vague sighings of a wind at even,
That wakes the wavelets of the slumbering sea
And dies on the creation of its breath,
And sinks and rises, fails and swells by fits,
Was the sweet stream of thought that with wild motion
Flowed o'er the Spirit's human sympathies.
The mighty tide of thought had paused awhile,
Which from the Dæmon now like ocean's stream Again began to pour.—

To me is given
The wonders of the human world to keep—
Space, matter, time and mind—let the sight
Renew and strengthen all thy failing hope.
All things are recreated, and the flame
Of consentaneous love inspires all life:
The fertile bosom of the earth gives suck
To myriads, who still grow beneath her care,
Rewarding her with their pure perfectness:
The balmy breathings of the wind inhale
Her virtues, and diffuse them all abroad:
Health floats amid the gentle atmosphere,
Glows in the fruits, and mantles on the stream:
No storms deform the beaming brow of heaven,
Nor scatter in the freshness of its pride
The foliage of the undecaying trees;
But fruits are ever ripe, flowers ever fair,
And Autumn proudly bears her matron grace,
Kindling a flush on the fair cheek of Spring,
Whose virgin bloom beneath the ruddy fruit
Reflects its tint and blushes into love.

The habitable earth is full of bliss;
Those wastes of frozen billows that were hurled
By everlasting snow-storms round the poles,
Where matter dared not vegetate nor live,
But ceaseless frost round the vast solitude
Bound its broad zone of stillness, are unloosed;
And fragrant zephyrs there from spicy isles
Ruffle the placid ocean-deep, that rolls
Its broad, bright surges to the sloping sand,
Whose roar is wakened into echoings sweet
To murmur through the heaven-breathing groves
And melodize with man’s bless’d nature there.

The vast tract of the parched and sandy waste
Now teems with countless rills and shady woods,
Corn-fields and pastures and white cottages;
And where the startled wilderness did hear
A savage conqueror stained in kindred blood,
Hymning his victory, or the milder snake
Crushing the bones of some frail antelope
Within his brazen folds—the dewy lawn,
Offering sweet incense to the sun-rise, smiles
To see a babe before his mother’s door,
Share with the green and golden basilisk
That comes to lick his feet, his morning’s meal.
Those trackless deeps, where many a weary sail
Has seen, above the illimitable plain,
Morning on night and night on morning rise,
Whilst still no land to greet the wanderer spread
Its shadowy mountains on the sun-bright sea,
Where the loud roarings of the tempest-waves
So long have mingled with the gusty wind
In melancholy loneliness, and swept 100
The desert of those ocean solitudes,
But vocal to the sea-bird’s harrowing shriek,
The bellowing monster, and the rushing storm,
Now to the sweet and many-mingling sounds
Of kindliest human impulses respond:
Those lonely realms bright garden-isles begem,
With lightsome clouds and shining seas between,
And fertile valleys, resonant with bliss,
Whilst green woods overcanopy the wave,
Which like a toil-worn labourer leaps to shore,
To meet the kisses of the flowrets there.

Man chief perceives the change, his being notes
The gradual renovation, and defines
Each movement of its progress on his mind.
Man, where the gloom of the long polar night
Lowered o’er the snow-clad rocks and frozen soil,
Where scarce the hardiest herb that braves the frost
Basked in the moonlight’s ineffectual glow,
Shrank with the plants, and darkened with the night; 119
Nor where the tropics bound the realms of day
With a broad belt of mingling cloud and flame,
Where blue mists through the unmoving atmosphere
Scattered the seeds of pestilence, and fed
Unnatural vegetation, where the land
Teemed with all earthquake, tempest and disease,
Was man a nobler being; slavery
Had crushed him to his country's bloodstained dust.

Even where the milder zone afforded man
A seeming shelter, yet contagion there,
Blighting his being with unnumbered ills, 130
Spread like a quenchless fire; nor truth availed Till late to arrest its progress, or create
That peace which first in bloodless victory waved
Her snowy standard o'er this favoured clime:
There man was long the train-bearer of slaves,
The mimic of surrounding misery,
The jackal of ambition's lion-rage,
The bloodhound of religion's hungry zeal.

Here now the human being stands adorning
This loveliest earth with taintless body and mind;
Bless'd from his birth with all bland impulses,
Which gently in his noble bosom wake
All kindly passions and all pure desires.
Him, still from hope to hope the bliss pursuing,
Which from the exhaustless lore of human weal
Draws on the virtuous mind, the thoughts that rise
In time-destroying infiniteness, gift
With self-enshrined eternity, that mocks
The unprevailing hoariness of age, 149
And man, once fleeting o'er the transient scene
Swift as an unremembered vision, stands
Immortal upon earth: no longer now
He slays the beast that sports around his dwelling
And horribly devours its mangled flesh,
Or drinks its vital blood, which like a stream
Of poison thro' his fevered veins did flow
Feeding a plague that secretly consumed
His feeble frame, and kindling in his mind
Hatred, despair, and fear and vain belief,
The germs of misery, death, disease, and crime.
No longer now the winged habitants,
That in the woods their sweet lives sing away,
Flee from the form of man; but gather round,
And prune their sunny feathers on the hands
Which little children stretch in friendly sport
Towards these dreadless partners of their play.
All things are void of terror: man has lost
His desolating privilege, and stands
An equal amidst equals: happiness
And science dawn though late upon the earth;
Peace cheers the mind, health renovates the frame;
Disease and pleasure cease to mingle here,
Reason and passion cease to combat there;
Whilst mind unfettered o'er the earth extends Its all-subduing energies, and wields
The sceptre of a vast dominion there.

Mild is the slow necessity of death:
The tranquil spirit fails beneath its grasp,
Without a groan, almost without a fear,
Resigned in peace to the necessity,
Calm as a voyager to some distant land,
And full of wonder, full of hope as he.
The deadly germs of languor and disease
Waste in the human frame, and Nature gifts
With choicest boons her human worshippers.
How vigorous now the athletic form of age!
How clear its open and unwrinkled brow!
Where neither avarice, cunning, pride, or care,
Had stamped the seal of grey deformity
On all the mingling lineaments of time.
How lovely the intrepid front of youth!
How sweet the smiles of taintless infancy.

Within the massy prison's mouldering courts,
Fearless and free the ruddy children play,
Weaving gay chaplets for their innocent brows
With the green ivy and the red wall-flower,
That mock the dungeon's unavailing gloom;
The ponderous chains, and gratings of strong iron,
There rust amid the accumulated ruins
Now mingling slowly with their native earth:
There the broad beam of day, which feebly once
Lighted the cheek of lean captivity
With a pale and sickly glare, now freely shines
On the pure smiles of infant playfulness:
No more the shuddering voice of hoarse despair
Peals through the echoing vaults, but soothing notes
Of ivy-fingered winds and gladsome birds
And merriment are resonant around.

The fanes of Fear and Falsehood hear no more
The voice that once waked multitudes to war
Thundering through all their aisles: but now respond To the death dirge of the melancholy wind:
It were a sight of awfulness to see
The works of faith and slavery, so vast,
So sumptuous, yet withal so perishing!

I.
Even as the corpse that rests beneath their wall. A thousand mourners deck the pomp of death. To-day, the breathing marble glows above. To decorate its memory, and tongues Are busy of its life: to-morrow, worms. In silence and in darkness seize their prey. These ruins soon leave not a wreck behind: Their elements, wide-scattered o'er the globe, To happier shapes are moulded, and become Ministrant to all blissful impulses: Thus human things are perfected, and earth, Even as a child beneath its mother's love, Is strengthened in all excellence, and grows Fairer and nobler with each passing year.

Now Time his dusky pennons o'er the scene Closes in steadfast darkness, and the past Fades from our charmed sight. My task is done: Thy lore is learned. Earth's wonders are thine own, With all the fear and all the hope they bring. My spells are past: the present now recurs. Ah me! a pathless wilderness remains Yet unsubdued by man's reclaiming hand.

Yet, human Spirit, bravely hold thy course, Let virtue teach thee firmly to pursue The gradual paths of an aspiring change: For birth and life and death, and that strange state Before the naked powers that through the world Wander like winds have found a human home, All tend to perfect happiness, and urge The restless wheels of being on their way, Whose flashing spokes, instinct with infinite life, Bicker and burn to gain their destined goal:
For birth but wakes the universal mind
Whose mighty streams might else in silence flow Thro' the vast world, to individual sense
Of outward shows, whose unexperienced shape
New modes of passion to its frame may lend;
Life is its state of action, and the store
Of all events is aggregated there
That variegate the eternal universe;
Death is a gate of dreariness and gloom,
That leads to azure isles and beaming skies
And happy regions of eternal hope.
Therefore, O Spirit! fearlessly bear on:
Though storms may break the primrose on its stalk,
Though frosts may blight the freshness of its bloom,
Yet spring's awakening breath will woo the earth,
To feed with kindliest dews its favourite flower,
That blooms in mossy banks and darksome glens,
Lighting the green wood with its sunny smile.

Fear not then, Spirit, death's disrobing hand,
So welcome when the tyrant is awake,
So welcome when the bigot's hell-torch flares;
'Tis but the voyage of a darksome hour,
The transient gulph-dream of a startling sleep.
For what thou art shall perish utterly,
But what is thine may never cease to be;
Death is no foe to virtue: earth has seen
Love's brightest roses on the scaffold bloom,
Mingling with freedom's fadeless laurels there,
And presaging the truth of visioned bliss.
Are there not hopes within thee, which this scene
Of linked and gradual being has confirmed?
Hopes that not vainly thou, and living fires
Of mind as radiant and as pure as thou, 280
Have shone upon the paths of men—return,
Surpassing Spirit, to that world where thou Art destined an eternal war to wage
With tyranny and falsehood, and uproot
The germs of misery from the human heart.
Thine is the hand whose piety would soothe
The thorny pillow of unhappy crime,
Whose impotence an easy pardon gains,
Watching its wanderings as a friend's disease:
Thine is the brow whose mildness would defy
Its fiercest rage, and brave its sternest will, 291
When fenced by power and master of the world.
Thou art sincere and good; of resolute mind,
Free from heart-withering custom’s cold control,
Of passion lofty, pure and unsubdued.
Earth's pride and meanness could not vanquish thee,
And therefore art thou worthy of the boon
Which thou hast now received: virtue shall keep Thy footsteps in the path that thou hast trod,
And many days of beaming hope shall bless 300
Thy spotless life of sweet and sacred love.
Go, happy one, and give that bosom joy
Whose sleepless spirit waits to catch
Light, life and rapture from thy smile.

The Dæmon called its wingèd ministers.
Speechless with bliss the Spirit mounts the car,
That rolled beside the crystal battlement,
Bending her beamy eyes in thankfulness.
The burning wheels inflame
The steep descent of Heaven's untrodden way.
Fast and far the chariot flew:
The mighty globes that rolled Around the gate of the Eternal Fane
Lessened by slow degrees, and soon appeared
Such tiny twinklers as the planet orbs
That ministering on the solar power
With borrowed light pursued their narrower way.

Earth floated then below:
The chariot paused a moment;
The Spirit then descended:
And from the earth departing
The shadows with swift wings
Speeded like thought upon the light of Heaven.

The Body and the Soul united then,
A gentle start convulsed Ianthe's frame:
Her veiny eyelids quietly unclosed;
Moveless awhile the dark blue orbs remained:
She looked around in wonder and beheld
Henry, who kneeled in silence by her couch,
Watching her sleep with looks of speechless love,
And the bright beaming stars
That through the casement shone.

MONT BLANC.

LINES WRITTEN IN THE VALE OF CHAMOUNI.¹

I.
The everlasting universe of things
Flows through the mind, and rolls its rapid waves,

¹ This poem is the conclusion of a little volume of prose published in 1817, the joint production of Shelley
Now dark—now glittering—now reflecting gloom—
Now lending splendour, where from secret springs
The source of human thought its tribute brings
Of waters,—with a sound but half its own,
Such as a feeble brook will oft assume
In the wild woods, among the mountains lone,
Where waterfalls around it leap for ever,
Where woods and winds contend, and a vast river
Over its rocks ceaselessly bursts and raves.

II.
Thus thou, Ravine of Arve—dark, deep Ravine—
Thou many-coloured, many-voiced vale,
Over whose pines, and crags, and caverns sail
Fast cloud-shadows and sunbeams; awful scene,
Where Power in likeness of the Arve comes down
From the ice gulps that gird his secret throne, Bursting through these dark mountains like the flame and his second wife. It is entitled History of a Six Weeks' Tour through a Part of France, Switzerland, Germany, and Holland: with Letters descriptive of a Sail round the Lake of Geneva. In the Preface Shelley says the poem "was composed under the immediate impression of the deep and powerful feelings excited by the objects which it attempts to describe; and as an undisciplined overflowing of the soul, rests its claim to approbation on an attempt to imitate the untameable wildness and inaccessible solemnity from which those feelings sprang." The main inspiration appears to have been drawn from a lingering gaze upon the beauties of the Vale of Chamouni from the Bridge over the Arve; but the poem records much which cannot have been seen from that point.—Ed.

Of lightning thro' the tempest;—thou dost lie,
Thy giant brood of pines around thee clinging,
Children of elder time, in whose devotion
The chainless winds still come and ever came To drink their odours, and their mighty swinging
To hear—an old and solemn harmony;
Thine earthly rainbows stretched across the sweep
Of the ætherial waterfall, whose veil
Robes some unsculptured image; the strange sleep
Which when the voices of the desert fail
Wraps all in its own deep eternity;—
Thy caverns echoing to the Arve's commotion,
A loud, lone sound no other sound can tame;
Thou art pervaded with that ceaseless motion,
Thou art the path of that unresting sound—
Dizzy Ravine! and when I gaze on thee
I seem as in a trance sublime and strange
To muse on my own separate phantasy,
My own, my human mind, which passively
Now renders and receives fast influencings, Holding an unremitting interchange
With the clear universe of things around;
One legion of wild thoughts, whose wandering wings
Now float above thy darkness, and now rest
Where that or thou art no unbidden guest,
In the still cave of the witch Poesy,
Seeking among the shadows that pass by Ghosts of all things that are, some shade of thee,
Some phantom, some faint image; till the breast
From which they fled recalls them, thou art there!
III.

Some say that gleams of a remoter world
Visit the soul in sleep,—that death is slumber,
And that its shapes the busy thoughts outnumber

Of those who wake and live.—I look on high;
Has some unknown omnipotence unfurled
The veil of life and death? or do I lie
In dream, and does the mightier world of sleep

Spread far around and inaccessibly
Its circles? For the very spirit fails,
Driven like a homeless cloud from steep to steep
That vanishes among the viewless gales!

Far, far above, piercing the infinite sky,
Mont Blanc appears,—still, snowy, and serene—
Its subject mountains their unearthly forms Pile around it, ice and rock; broad vales between

Of frozen floods, unfathomable deeps,
Blue as the overhanging heaven, that spread
And wind among the accumulated steeps;
A desert peopled by the storms alone,
Save when the eagle brings some hunter's bone,
And the wolf tracks her there—how hideously
Its shapes are heaped around! rude, bare, and high,

Ghastly, and scarred, and riven.—Is this the scene
Where the old Earthquake-daemon taught her young Ruin? Were these their toys? or did a sea
Of fire envelope once this silent snow?

None can reply—all seems eternal now,
The wilderness has a mysterious tongue
Which teaches awful doubt, or faith so mild,
So solemn, so serene, that man may be
But for such faith with nature reconciled;
IN THE VALE OF CHAMOUNI.

Thou hast a voice, great Mountain, to repeal Large codes of fraud and woe; not understood
By all, but which the wise, and great, and good Interpret, or make felt, or deeply feel.

IV.
The fields, the lakes, the forests, and the streams,
Ocean, and all the living things that dwell
Within the dædal earth; lightning, and rain Earthquake, and fiery flood, and hurricane,
The torpor of the year when feeble dreams
Visit the hidden buds, or dreamless sleep
Holds every future leaf and flower;—the bound
With which from that detested trance they leap;
The works and ways of man, their death and birth,
And that of him and all that his may be;
All things that move and breathe with toil and sound
Are born and die; revolve, subside and swell.
Power dwells apart in its tranquillity
Remote, serene, and inaccessible:
And this, the naked countenance of earth,
On which I gaze, even these primeval mountains Teach the adverting mind. The glaciers creep Like snakes that watch their prey, from their far fountains,
Slow rolling on; there, many a precipice,
Frost and the Sun in scorn of mortal power
Have piled: dome, pyramid, and pinnacle,
A city of death, distinct with many a tower
And wall impregnable of beaming ice.
Yet not a city, but a flood of ruin
Is there, that from the boundaries of the sky Rolls its perpetual stream; vast pines are strewing
Its destined path, or in the mangled soil Branchless and shattered stand; the rocks, drawn down
From you remotest waste, have overthrown
The limits of the dead and living world,
Never to be reclaimed. The dwelling-place
Of insects, beasts, and birds, becomes its spoil;
Their food and their retreat for ever gone,
So much of life and joy is lost. The race Of man, flies far in dread; his work and dwelling
Vanish, like smoke before the tempest's stream, And their place is not known. Below, vast caves
Shine in the rushing torrent's restless gleam, Which from those secret chasms in tumult welling
Meet in the vale, and one majestic River,
The breath and blood of distant lands, for ever Rolls its loud waters to the ocean waves, Breathes its swift vapours to the circling air.

v.
Mont Blanc yet gleams on high:—the power is
there,
The still and solemn power of many sights,
And many sounds, and much of life and death.
In the calm darkness of the moonless nights,
In the lone glare of day, the snows descend
Upon that Mountain; none beholds them there,
Nor when the flakes burn in the sinking sun,
Or the star-beams dart through them:—Winds content
Silently there, and heap the snow with breath
Rapid and strong, but silently! Its home
The voiceless lightning in these solitudes
Keeps innocently, and like vapour broods
Over the snow. The secret strength of things Which governs thought, and to the infinite dome
Of heaven is as a law, inhabits thee!
And what were thou, and earth, and stars, and sea,
If to the human mind's imaginings
Silence and solitude were vacancy?

_July 23, 1816._

CANCELLED PASSAGE OF MONT BLANC.

There is a voice, not understood by all,
Sent from these desert-caves. It is the roar
Of the rent ice-cliff which the sunbeams call,
Plunging into the vale—it is the blast
Descending on the pines—the torrents pour. . . .

¹ The word _June_ which stands in Shelley's and Mrs. Shelley's editions is an obvious error. Shelley entered the Vale of Chamouni on the 21st of July, saw the glacier of Montanvert on the 23rd, visited the glacier of Boisson in the evening of the same day, and returned on that evening to Chamouni.—Ed.